A Style All Our Own

Hey! Look Us Over

Impressions are funny things. In fact, people are always making up catchy phrases about them. We are taught not to judge according to appearance or "judge a book by its cover," but nevertheless we do.

Remember being at a party and a group of strangers walked in the door? A slight hush fell over the room as impressions formed in the minds of everyone at the party. The way these newcomers looked and acted helped us form opinions about them and where they went to school.

Every school has a "look," or a style of its own, and it's the students who determine just what that style will be. Northview is no exception. Every student or group of students here has unique qualities which are combined to create a style and a personality for the school as a whole.

For example, the community gets many glimpses of Northview's style through such programs as sports and music. Beginning in August, and continuing through November, some Sylvania residents got a preview of the marching band as it practiced for the football season.

The cross country and basketball teams also gave residents a preview as they could be seen running along the streets of Sylvania. This pre-season preparation paid off as many of Northview's teams set a style of excellence — the best ever record for the football team and state contenders in girls' tennis are just two examples.

The sports program not only provided exposure and competition for many athletes, but it provided the main source of entertainment on weekend evenings — plus a visit to McDonald's. In fact, so many students chose Mac's as a place to go, that police were often called to the scene.

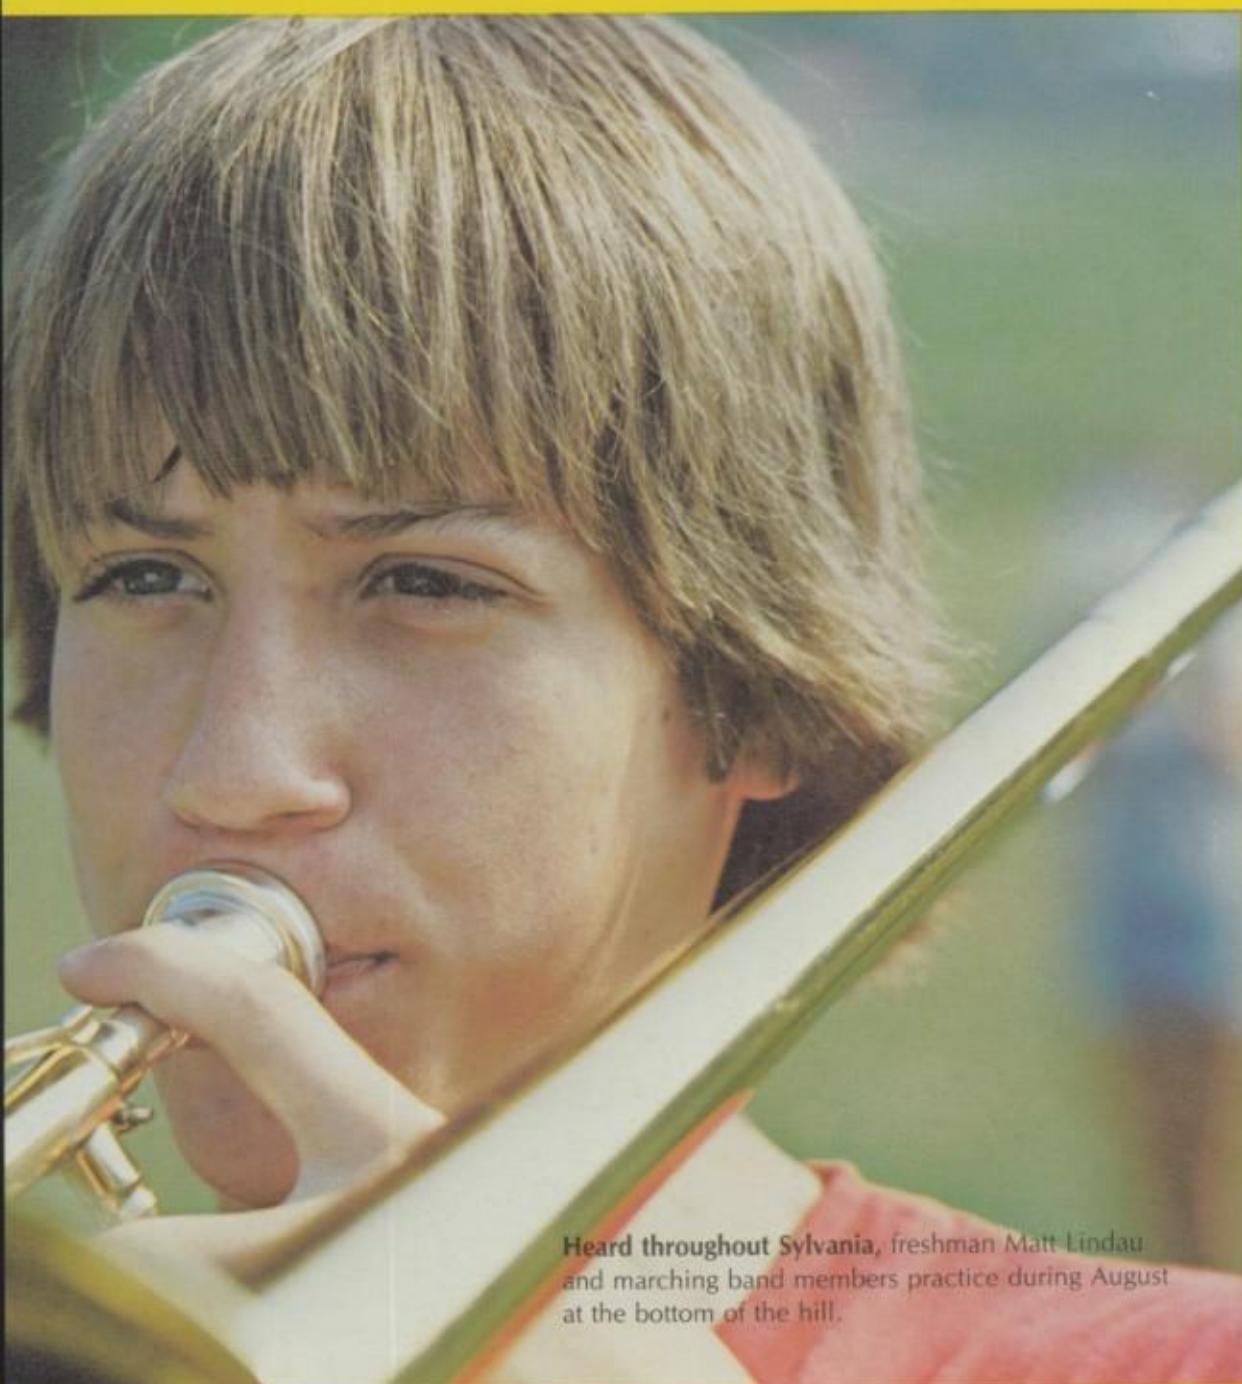

Every school has its own hangouts, traditions and style of doing things. Examples such as these and the community's reactions helped give us a style all our own.

The pride Sylvania has in its high schools is obvious to an outsider when looking at this giant football schedule at Fleetwing gas station. Senior Debbie Shotts fills her tank.

Being a new student can cause some problems. Sophomore Lisa Hogge discusses how to transfer her Illinois driver's license with Mr. Dan Thomas, a first year counselor at Northview.

Heard throughout Sylvania, freshman Matt Lindau and marching band members practice during August at the bottom of the hill.

It seems as though every decade is characterized by the fads that were popular at that time. The epitome of the Sixties was hippies and hand grenades, and late Seventies will be remembered for the disco craze. Now we're into the Eighties and new fads are springing up.

Northview is definitely not exempt from these crazes. Some fads came and went, but others remained in good standing the entire school year.

The song "Another One Bites the Dust" by Queen is a prime example of a temporary rage. It seemed to have inspirational qualities at the time of powderpuff and throughout the football season. But by the time hockey and basketball were underway — people began to change the radio station after one stanza.

Phrases and sayings went in and out too, maybe even more quickly. When walking down the hall, it was easy to get sick of such phrases as "aah-oooh," or "really, you guys." "I mean, like, ya know, what was awesome in the fall became really bogus by the time final exams rolled around."

Not all trends changed that quickly though. Some stuck around for the completion of the year, and some will stick around a lot longer. One such style began two years ago at the second annual Northview-Southview football game. Making this game special from all of the others, students and fans ran onto the field to wish the Wildcats good luck. This fall showed the fan's same enthusiasm and left the Wildcats with a growing tradition.

Working in Northview's greenhouse is junior Greg Mather.

The new student luncheon was held in the Golden Chandelier again this year. Senior Nancy Clendenin and junior Billy Young provide some of the entertainment.

Head football coach Craig Schaefer didn't have to make any excuses for the team during this year's pep assemblies. The Wildcats ended the season with a 7-2-1 record.

Around 7:15, the students generally arrived at school by bus, car or foot.

During the Halloween day pep assembly, students participated in a costume gong show.

With the help of senior Jimmy Growden and Pat and Jake's towing service, Southview's rock was moved to Northview for the third year in a row.

There are other such incidents that may not be considered true traditions, yet they seem to happen year after year. Maybe, no one ever noticed because they were such everyday occurrences. A cold Monday would not have been the same without squeezing in around the radiators before class, or waiting in line for a patty melt and rings at lunch.

Not only on Mondays, but every day of the week there were posters or notices plastering the walls for one thing or another. AFS, a car smash, carnation sales, yearbook sales and Junior Prom were just a few of the masterpieces of art that probably were never noticed as typical hallway characteristics.

Whether a trend, a tradition or just a passing fad, they made not only 1980-81, but our school different from all others — giving us a style all our own.

Taxation for textbooks

Receiving a new book on the first day of school probably does not make a student wonder about where the book came from. But, where that book came from is the concern of Mr. Roy Becker and the Sylvania School Board.

It is Mr. Becker who receives funds from the board to finance all programs at Northview. This year Mr. Becker received nearly $80,000 to cover all Northview expenses.

The board collects most of its operating money from Sylvania residents.

Sylvania residents have a reputation for being rather generous with their tax dollars, levying mills which raise nearly $9 million for the school system. This generosity has enabled Sylvania to maintain a school system that is widely recognized as an outstanding one, influencing many families to become Sylvania residents. According to Mr. Jim Miller, Sylvania realtor, when potential buyers approach area realtors, they have often heard of the quality of education here.

However, not only are people attracted due to education, but also due to the community in general. The popularity of Sylvania is evident when considering the number of Toledo executives who choose to live outside the city, creating a demand for suburban housing.

All of these factors can be examined together to form a cycle true for Sylvania. There is a considerably large number of middle class families who demand a good education system. These people are willing to pay for this system through taxes. This retains the established quality which, in turn, attracts people here driving up the resale value of homes.

Senior Mark MacDonald learns by doing in the machine trade's two year program. With the help of Mr. Kay Dauterman, he makes a part to repair a lathe in the shop.

Learning takes on more forms than one as senior Bill Maxwell helps David Tashmia make a marimba during the Independent Living class.

Sylvania's selected students

Several years ago the Sylvania school system decided to start a school for exceptional students called the School for Expelled Students and Pregnant Girls, holding classes in the basement of an area church. This school has evolved into the Off-Campus school which serves students from both Northview and Southview.

Before, students were sent to this school because of smoking problems and pregnancy, but as the name has changed so have the reasons students are now sent there.

Most students are sent to Off-Campus because of excessive tardiness, problems in getting along with teachers, or drug abuse. A review committee selects which students can attend Off-Campus after it has received a referral from a counselor, teacher or the student himself. Approximately 30 students are chosen every year and others wishing to attend are placed on a waiting list.

This year, 34 students were selected to attend the Off-Campus school. Some of the students have been at Off-Campus for four years, others transferred during the year.

Although the typical school day at Off-Campus differs from Northview (classes are from 7:45-1:00 with two breaks and a 45 minute lunch period), the basic courses offered earned are the same.

Students may enroll in classes at Northview that are not offered in the Off-Campus program. For example, students Patty Cox and Bill Snapp were involved in the food service program and other students participated in the swimming and volleyball teams.

Aside from the regular class schedule, the students participate in many other activities. Every Friday a family meeting is held to solve problems within the school. A committee of five students elected by their peers meet to decide what disciplinary action should be taken for those who do not abide by the rules. Other unique features of the school are the special project courses taught by each teacher. These courses include movies, gymnastics, rocketry, cooking, chess, video taping and horseback riding. Field trips were also taken to several metroparks and the zoo.

Many students remain at Off-Campus through their senior year; however, students may return to Northview if they wish. The teachers treat the student as he will be treated at Northview to make the adjustment easier after the decision to transfer has been agreed to by the teacher and parent.

There are many differing opinions about transferring among the students. Wade Cousino said he definitely liked the Off-Campus school better because of the individual attention, yet Willard Stuckey would rather be at Northview because "the school is too small and I don't like the rules." A few of the other students agreed with junior John Leland who was unsure because he had never attended Northview.

Instructor Bill Tucholski added that even with all of the differing opinions, the attitude of the students was very positive and the teachers hope to make Off-Campus a place where students want to learn.

Behind closed doors

Some of the most mysterious places at Northview High School include two classrooms: E-1 and E-6. Not many people knew what went on in these rooms because the doors were usually closed and almost all of the windows were papered over.

In the top window of one door hung a stained glass plaque with two words on it: PUB ROOM, the room where The Wyandotte and The Student Prints were planned and produced.

Furthermore, not everyone had the chance to work in the Pub. The first opportunity that some students had to enter this room was taking Journalism I in their junior or senior year. In the spring, the following year's newspaper staff was chosen from the Journalism I students. This year, under the direction of co-editors Liz Maxwell and Julia Murbach, and with help from Mr. Louis Levy, the adviser, the staff published an award-winning paper every two weeks.

The 1981 Wyandotte staff was also chosen in the spring of 1980 from among many junior and sophomore applicants. One of the largest staffs in recent years, 31 students, worked during the summer to sell at least $300 worth of advertising per person. They also attended workshops in late August, all held before school started in September.

Most of the staff members spent more than one period a day on their work to meet the many deadlines throughout the year. They often stayed after school until the custodian told them to leave.

Even though many students did not know what the interior of the Pub looked like, they were able to read the end-products of life behind closed doors — The Student Prints and The Wyandotte.

Two heads are better than one when working on a yearbook layout. Juniors Mary Beth Moran and Diane Youssef prepare for the first deadline.

Setting the type size on the headline machine for her Student Prints article is senior Karen Hammer.

Twice a week the Journalism I students have a news quiz to see how well they read the newspapers. Junior Edie Paterson does some last minute studying.

Pasting together another layout for the school newspaper to send to the publisher are seniors Joan Osterman and Chris Cavanaugh.

After gathering together the photographs and ideas for a yearbook layout, senior co-editor Jenna Stack and junior Jim Klein work to put things together.

Yearbook and Prints are not all hard work; parties do occur. Abby Edinger celebrates after the first yearbook deadline in October.

Being a staff member means constantly having to make decisions as to what should be changed and what should be left the same, as senior Prints co-editor Liz Maxwell and senior Barry Ward are doing.

Getting a head start

Worried about getting a job after graduation? These days people say that a high school education doesn't mean much when getting a job. One way a student might have insured his future was by participating in one of the vocational training programs at Northview.

A variety of vocational classes such as electronics, drafting, machine shop, Diversified Health Occupations and cosmetology were offered. These courses gave the students a head start in securing good jobs after high school. "We are learning jobs to go out in the world with," said senior Errol Smolenski, an electronics student.

Electronics is a complex program teaching students the basics of computers, transistors and televisions. With more and more emphasis being placed on electronics in society, Mr. Thomas Althoff, electronics teacher, said, "More students want to know how it all works."

Another vocational course that has a great deal to do with technology is machine shop, where the students assemble and repair all types of automotive parts. According to Mr. Rick Thomsen, students who are interested in continuing in automotive repair have a great advantage over those who have had no prior training and can easily get a job in an auto shop.

Cosmetology requires the students to take a pre-test to find out their abilities and interests. The cosmetology rooms, and also the DHO rooms, are simulations of what they would look like in the real world. In both courses students learn by practical application. For example, the cosmetology students are taught how to cut and style hair.

All of these vocational programs help prepare students for the future and give them a head start on a job of their choice.

After one year of drafting, sophomore Dean Barger is certain he can get a good job if he takes Drafting II.

This being his second year of architecture, sophomore Eric Hansen measures the true shape and size of an angle.

Mrs. Linda Brenner, the cosmetology teacher, demonstrates to junior Kathy Swartz the techniques of designing hair on a customer.

Making a jack screw is second year machine shop student senior Bill Earp.

Trying to find the internal resistance of a volt meter is electronics student Alan Bialy.

Having the cosmetology room open to the community enables the students to gain the needed experience to master the profession. Junior Shannon Godley demonstrates her abilities on a patron.

Burns says: Math is fun

By the year 2000, scientists predict that many everyday activities will be controlled by computers. Yet computers cannot run themselves, and humans will still be needed to use and maintain them. But how does one learn to operate computers?

For the past several years, a computer programming course has been offered at Northview. This quarter-long class teaches students how to program the computers and read the results.

According to Mrs. Roberta Hudson, one of the three teachers who instructed the course, the classes were almost full.

To teach the many math courses offered, many teachers and a variety of texts were needed. In order to fill the spaces created by resignations, two teachers were added to the math section this year. Mr. Terrance Minsel, who previously taught electronics here for five years, taught general math. Miss Susan Green, who taught algebra and geometry, was new to Northview. New analysis books, both honors and regular, were added to the existing texts.

With the increase in enrollment the past year, plus the addition of teachers and textbooks, Northview's math department is looking to the future. As Mr. Burns says, "The good math teachers that we had this past year were really needed to instruct our students in this mathematical world of ours."

Working to improve her computer skills is freshman Kristin Parker.

Taking time out to explain the day's calculus homework to senior Lisa Engen is senior Bob Jacobs.

Ancient arithmetic

What would school have been like more than 100 years ago, sitting in a little red schoolhouse, with one teacher for all the students? Mr. Allen Burns may have part of the answer.

As a hobby, Mr. Burns collects old math textbooks. The oldest book in his 600-plus collection is entitled Complete Measure. It was printed in Dublin, Ireland, in 1785. Despite the fact that it is almost 200 years old, it is in fairly good condition.

The math volumes, which Mr. Burns began collecting about five years ago, were found in antique shops, through book dealers and in the classified ad sections of the newspapers. The oldest books are leather-bound; beginning in 1850, the covers became cardboard. The books deal with practical, everyday problems and contain very little theory.

An example of life on the western frontier may be found in Ray's Arithmetic, published in 1877. When Mr. Burns reads story problems to students from the book using quantities of rum to illustrate an addition problem, the students found it surprising that alcohol was mentioned in a school book. Such problems are examples of how life has changed since the 1800s.

These books, in addition to showing how mathematics techniques have changed, give students a chance to glimpse how life was many years ago.

Mr. Allen Burns demonstrates to his Honors Geometry class how to remove a vest without taking off the suitcoat.

Hair & there

Have you ever wanted to get your hair cut but all of the beauty salons were booked up until next month and the cost was twice what you had planned to spend?

One way to beat the wait and the cost is to go to the cosmetology room at Northview and get your hair done cheaply, yet expertly. The junior and senior girls are taught and supervised by Mrs. Veronica Zak, the senior adviser, and Mrs. Linda Brenner, the junior adviser. They are experienced not only in styling, but also hair compositions too.

The students were taken on many field trips and visited beauty salons where they got the personal experience and observation needed to perfect their technique. Second-year cosmetology student Brenda Heyman said, "I believe the cosmetology students learn more in these classes than most students do in college prep courses."

Every Monday, Wednesday and Friday until 11:30 a.m., patrons from both the community and the school come to the cosmetology lab for hair styling, dying and perms.

The cosmetology students have a lot to look forward to after high school. With two years of experience behind them they could easily get a job in a beauty parlor, and some have even gone on to managing their own salon.

A new look

Hair styles are like fads, they come and go with the change of seasons. It takes only one girl to come to school wearing her hair a different way and the whole school starts making appointments. Everyone wants a new style they can call their own.

Freshman Kelly Curry said, "Once in a while its nice to have a change in hairstyles, a person needs a different look. It adds some variety to your life." While junior Jana Hollar thought that if she let her hair grow out she could do more with it and therefore have more variety.

Junior Dave McKenna, host of Hang That Witch, (lower right) prevents junior Bill Young from reciting the Lord's Prayer. Being able to recite the Lord's Prayer would be considered proof of his innocence.

No camping trip is complete without the traditional campfire and marshmallow roast. Freshman Sue Konop blows out her flaming marshmallow.

Every student on the NWOH trip is expected to help set up camp. Freshman Matt Gantz and seniors Mike Carroll and Jim Melle contribute by putting up a net for a game of volleyball.

Mr. Thomas Berg is exhausted after the NWOH trip, due to the many pranks the students played on him. This year, the students moved his car 50 feet down the road.

Junior Sara Hilfinger, a convicted witch, proves that after whippings, her watch keeps ticking.

More than a marshmallow roast

Hear Ye! Hear Ye! Order in the court, for today, Wednesday, Sept. 19, is the opening of the Salem Witch Trials. The first defendant is none other than ... Bill Young? Witch trials in 1980?

In Mrs. Vivian Hutchisson's Honors American Studies classes, the students reenacted the Salem Witch Trials as they were said to have been. Costumed in a wide variety of caps, bonnets and robes, the participants portrayed the Puritans to make the viewers believe that they were really there, in Salem, Mass., in 1692.

The mock trials were just one of the many special activities in the Honors American Studies class, a combination of both American literature and American history.

The students met in room A-2 to listen and learn as Mrs. Hutchisson gave her two-period-long lectures on the Revolutionary War and the literature of that time. "By combining these classes into a two-period block, the students get an opportunity to understand how literature and history affect each other and the relationship between them," Mrs. Hutchisson explained.

In addition to American Studies, a wide variety of other history and literature classes are offered to students. Among these is Northwest Ohio History. Two times in the fall and again in the spring, a school bus is loaded with tents, cookware, food and sleeping bags as NWOH classes prepare for a two-day camping trip.

Mr. Thomas Berg, the NWOH teacher, explained that taking the class on the camping trip gives them a better attitude toward the class and makes them realize that there are many interesting facts to learn about the history of Northwest Ohio.

On the camp-out the students set up their own camp, prepared their own food and learned about responsibility. In addition to the six-mile hike along the banks of the tow-path of the Miami-Erie Canal, canoe trips were offered down the Maumee River.

Juniors Debbie Halm, Kathy Frain and Lisa Buscani portray three girls about to be overcome by afflictions.

Serving Sylvania

What goes on in Sylvania during the hours of 7:35 a.m. to 2:25 p.m.? Northview wanted to know and become a part of the action, so they began organizing different clubs that would work with the public during the time that they were in school.

Northview opened a small restaurant located near the cafeteria, called the Golden Chandelier, opened to the public for lunch. The business was fully operated by the students, who were instructed and trained to prepare foods.

Northview also started training students in hair care. They thought that if they built a beauty parlor, the students could train and get the personal experience needed to get a job after high school.

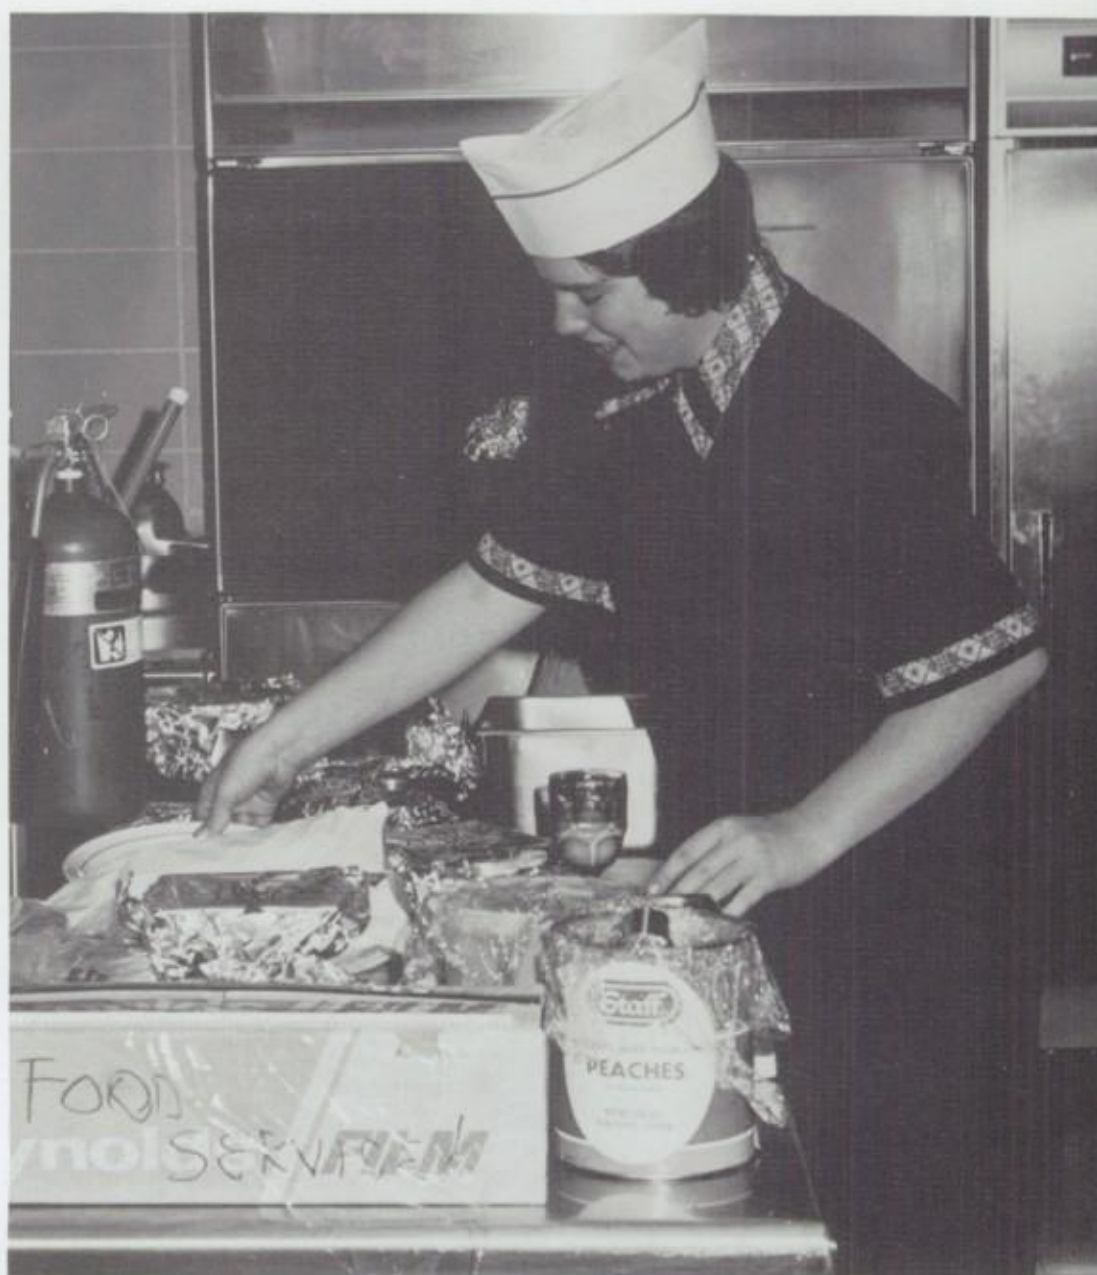

One other service that was offered to the community was the student aid program which sent senior students to elementary schools to assist the teachers. These students read stories and taught the younger children how to add using flash cards.

By offering these various services, Northview has become a part of the Sylvania community, in school and out.

Flirtin' with disaster

Every year many seniors take advantage of the privilege of leaving school before seventh period. This is something many students have looked forward to, but there are exceptions to every rule. Approximately 50 seniors and several juniors were enrolled in anatomy, Biology II and physics. Although science has proved disastrous for some students, these few juniors and seniors have stayed extra hours to further their scientific studies in these college level courses.

As compared to previous years the enrollment in anatomy decreased from two classes of 20 or more students to one class of 18. According to anatomy instructor Mr. Jerry Webb, the process of self-scheduling may have played a part in the enrollment because students chose commoms as an easy alternative.

Anatomy, although offered to juniors, consisted of mostly seniors. Juniors wishing to take the class must have taken chemistry, although chemistry was not a prerequisite for seniors. This was intended to push juniors into taking chemistry, which may be of more practical use than anatomy.

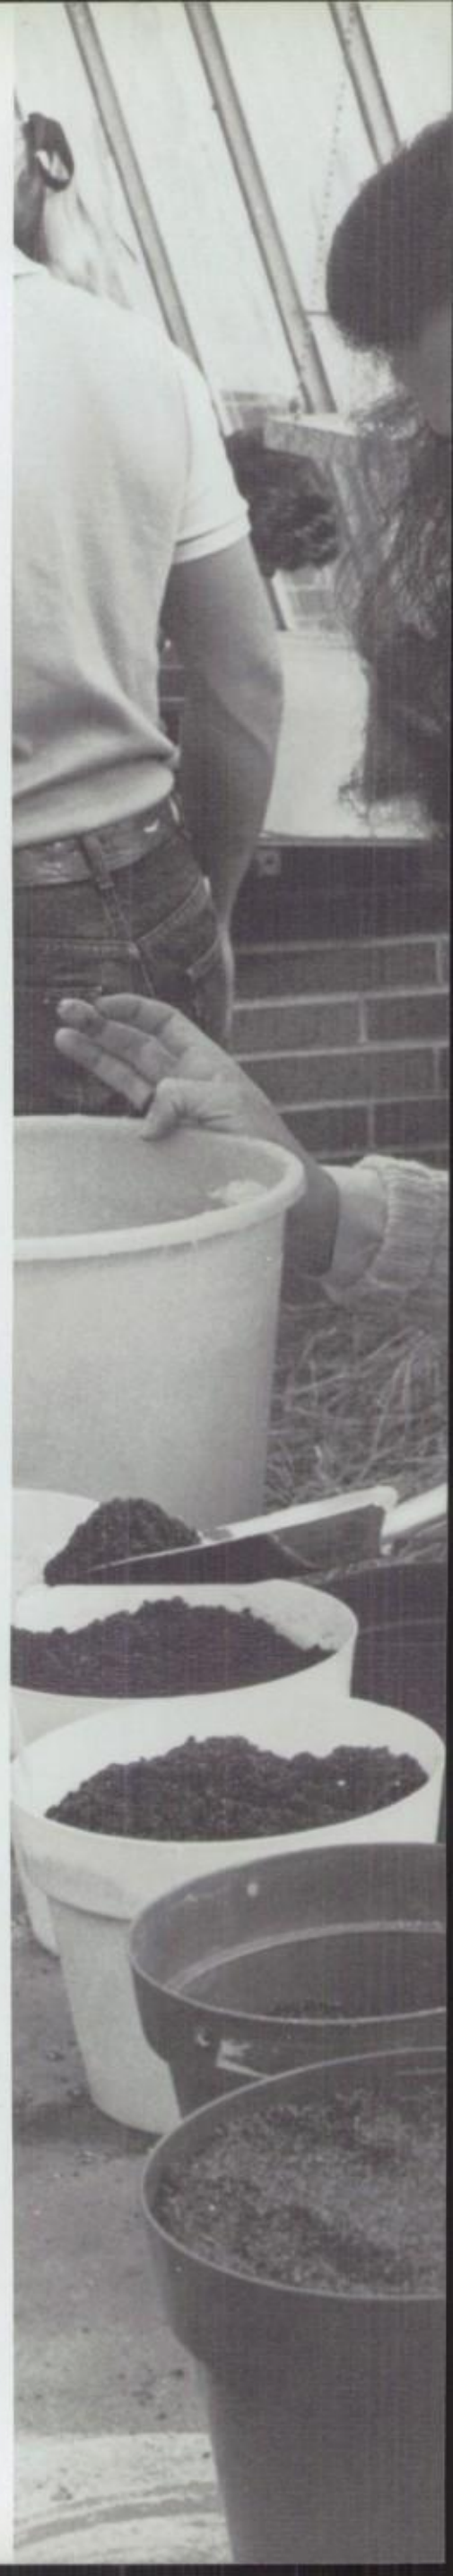

The actual study in anatomy began with the primary tissues of animals and worked through the human systems. Dissection also accompanied the lectures; a cat was the largest animal the students worked on. Outside the classroom field trips were taken to the Medical College of Ohio and Flower Hospital.

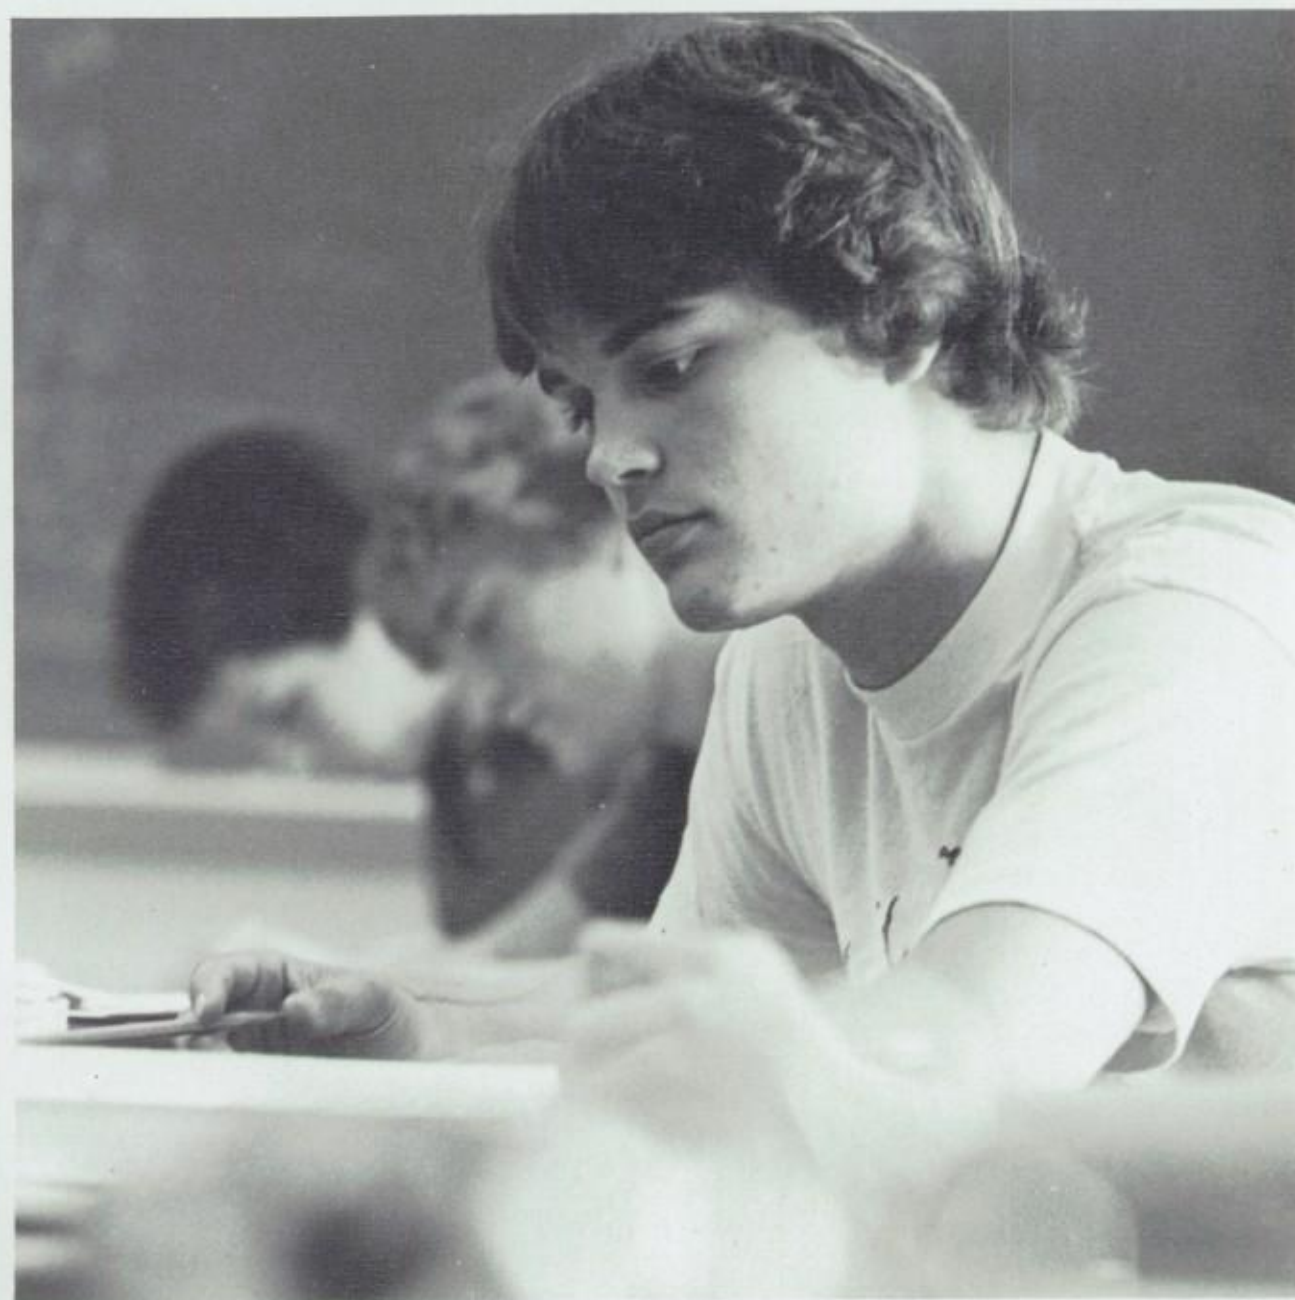

Physics was also offered to both seniors and juniors, but again the class was made up largely of seniors. Offered two periods a day, the physics classes were quite large. Mr. Bob Berning, physics teacher, felt this was due to the fact that few teachers were willing to teach senior classes in the afternoon. The class period was mainly lecture and the students concentrated on solving problems.

Mr. Berning added that a student passing physics at Northview would have little trouble passing a college physics course. Physics is not always all work; roasting marshmallows over Fisher burners provided a nice break.

Biology II is a course designed to pick up where Biology I left off by going into indepth treatment of the biological processes. This course, open to seniors and juniors, had a small class size of nine. According to instructor Mr. Gary Kocher, few students signed up for the class because of the degree of difficulty and conflicts with band members since Biology II is offered only during fifth period. Because of the small number of students, the Biology II atmosphere is much more relaxed than that of the Biology I class, although the textbook used is of a much higher level than that of Biology I or BSCS.

All of these advanced science courses offer college level activities to science minded students; however, these students must be willing to put in many extra hours of study. More importantly, these students have made the decision to give up free time in order to advance in these scientific areas.

Examining a sample of animal tissue as part of one of the many labs done in anatomy are seniors Tricia Carl and Mike Arvanitis.

Preparing various bulbs so that they will be forced to bloom early is senior Sue Pinsky.

Machine shop takes several periods out of a day in a student's academic life, but senior Mark Rhodes doesn't seem to mind.

Smash!

"Step right up, ladies and gents! Come smash our car! That's right, smash our car! 50 cents a hit, and $1.50 to smash in a window. Step right up . . ."

Last fall, the electronics club sponsored an unusual event — a car smash. "Someone just came up with the idea at a fund-raisers meeting," said senior Mark Reading.

But where in the world would someone be willing to donate a car to be smashed? Well, the club got the car from Bob's Auto parts on Sylvania Avenue. It had to be hauled to the parking lot, because it didn't work anyway.

There was a large turnout for the event, and electronic students raised more than $50.

After the smash was over, however, there was the slight problem of what to do with a totaled car. They decided to take it back to Bob's. "Maybe they can do something with it," Reading said.

Junior Greg Sielaff was one of the many students who turned out for the car smash.

Putting it back together

Everybody knows that commons can get a little rough sometimes, and in the process a chair could be broken. The damaged chair seems to disappear magically and then reappears later. But where did it go, and how did it get fixed?

Unless the chair is completely wrecked and goes into the trash, it generally ends up in the machine shop, where students weld it back together and tote it back to commons. However, that's not all the juniors and seniors in machine shop do.

They also do maintenance work for the school and repair machines for the community. Paperwork is also involved in the class. A student must have taken trigonometry to be in the class, according to Mr. Kay Dauterman, a shop teacher, because the math knowledge is applied as he works with the machines. The machine shop students seemed to agree that they liked working in the shop.

"I took machine shop because it's a good profession to go into, and I like to learn," said junior Steve Yeager, one of the 18 persons in the class. What they learn can be applied directly to a job.

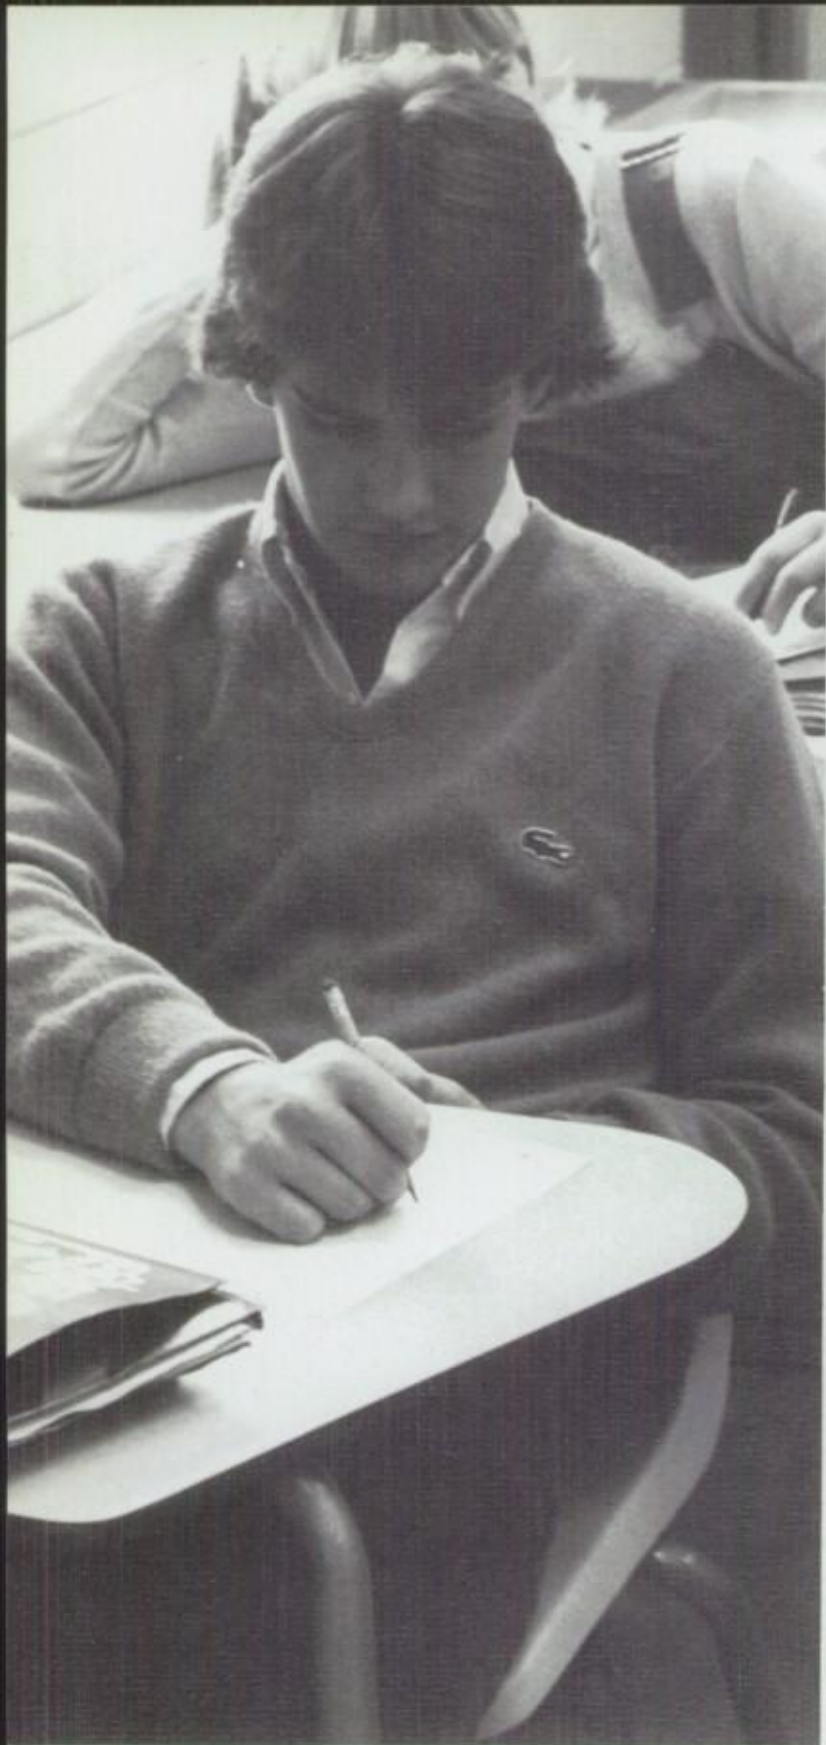

Most students get jobs immediately after high school. Usually it is in a machine shop or attending a tool crib, or as a tool and dye maker. A few continue on to college, and some two-year colleges offer an associate degree with a major on machine shop.

Thanks to the machine shop, many broken things in the school get fixed, and there are still usable chairs in commons.

Working with a drill is junior Grant Temple.

Using the skills he had acquired, junior Doug Laney demonstrates his knowledge on one of many machines in the shop.

French teacher, Mrs. Linda Zabor, works with French IV student junior Steve Johnson on a French story written by Voltaire.

It's a foreign affair

Bonjour! Hola! Guten Tag! are some of the expressions of greeting one might receive from a foreign language student while walking down the hall on the way to class.

Foreign language is growing in popularity at Northview. According to Mrs. Linda Zabor, French teacher, foreign language enrollment has almost doubled since 1977 when she first came to this school. She believes this sudden growth of interest is a result of the strict requirements set down by colleges and universities across the country.

Many of these schools are now requesting that students have some kind of foreign language background, and if students cannot meet these requirements they must add one or two classes to their college schedule.

Northview has tried to prepare students for these demands by offering a variety of foreign languages, including French, Spanish, Latin and German. Some of these courses go up to the fifth year.

Dr. Donna Sutton, Spanish teacher, feels students should take as many years of foreign language as possible in high school because, "Learning a different language is a very rewarding thing and a second language can always benefit one in the future."

Sophomore Kim Podges finds the story, The Petit Prince, amusing in French III class.

In German I class students work on the grammar and the history of the German language. Sophomore Susan Grouls works on her assignment.

Mrs. Constance Stackpole, German teacher who is fluent with five languages, aids sophomore Conny Till with her German homework.

Caring and sharing

Why would anyone want to give blood?

"I would give blood because some little child needs it," said senior Barry Ward. "If I gave blood for somebody else," said sophomore Debra Larson, "then I know there would be blood somewhere for me." Junior Anne Leslie added that there are a lot of people who really need that blood. But, others said they were afraid it might hurt or the needles frightened them.

The scariest thing about giving blood is not knowing whether it will hurt or not. Mrs. Roberta Moore, a DHO teacher, says that it is only a minimal discomfort and it is worthwhile to most people to make blood available to injured people.

There was much preparation that went into the blood drive held here last March. Cooperation from Red Cross volunteers, who did the actual blood drawing, DHO members, Student Government, and Quill and Scroll, who handled publicity, was required to make the drive a success.

After the blood was received, it was shipped to 19 northwest Ohio hospitals, where one pint of blood can help as many as five people. When the drive was over, the students involved in the DHO program were still around to clean up and straighten out the lab.

All during the drive, the DHO students were helping the Red Cross volunteers with equipment and welcoming the donors to the area. The drive was a preview of what is to come in a job that a DHO student may get.

"There are many, many health jobs that are opening up," said Mrs. Helen Kahl, a DHO teacher. "Anyone who has health training will be able to get a job after graduation," she stressed. Jobs of this nature include a dental or nurses' assistant, a physicians' office worker, a lab worker, or helping out in physical therapy.

Most of the students do not go on to a nursing or medical school. They usually elect to remain in the job they were required to have in their senior year, or they switch to another one at the same angle. DHO emphasizes the helping and caring aspect of the medical field, according to Mrs. Moore, and is good for anyone who wants to care for and share with people.

Demonstrating proper dental techniques on junior Kathy Nicholason is Mrs. Bobbi Moore.

DHO members not only practice checkups on each other, but they do workbook exercises as well, as junior Lisa Ziegler is doing.

Despite the common idea that DHO is all nursing, other aspects of the medical field are covered also, like dentistry.

Making sure junior Kim Mullen's blood pressure is okay is junior Sonya Clemens.

Volunteers

A pretty bouquet of flowers and a kind word can brighten a gray hospital room and cheer up any patient who's feeling a little low. Junior Aimee Carl was one of the many teenage candy strippers at the Flower Hospital Complex who had the assignment of delivering flowers and doing other odd jobs.

"My favorite part of the job was seeing the people's faces light up when I brought the flowers and talked to them," she said.

In addition to delivering flowers, candy strippers escorted patients, did front desk work and helped out in physical therapy. What's more, it was all volunteer work. "I want a medical career, and I thought candy stripping would be a good experience," said junior Beth Roe. "And it's such a good feeling to help people."

A candy stripper working at the front desk gets to deliver flowers and other presents to patients. Here, juniors Katy Rusch and Beth Roe prepare a poinsettia.

It's good for your health

A good physical fitness program includes both physical activity and training along with in-class study.

According to Mr. Herb Sweebe, a physical education teacher, the school tries to offer as well-rounded a program as possible.

Some of the various activities of the gym classes included recreational activities that students can continue throughout their lifetime, such as softball, tennis and volleyball. Freshman Bob Kross said he preferred field hockey because it is similar to ice hockey, a sport he wants to play while in high school.

However, not all students want to continue their favorite physical education activity beyond the allotted class time.

Freshman Kim Johnson, for instance, enjoyed gymnastics but said she had no plans to continue it.

The recent addition of the swim program gave the freshmen and sophomores a chance to continue their summer fun all year long.

Swimming wasn't restricted to only the underclassmen though. Swim instructors this year were mostly juniors and seniors. Most instructors felt that this opportunity would help them get a summer job as a lifeguard if they had earned an advanced senior life-saving certificate during the year.

Out of the gym and into the classroom, the students completed one of the graduation requirements by taking a health course. Everything from drugs and alcohol to first aid was covered through discussions, speakers and demonstrations.

Although the first year of gym and health may have seemed like a drag to some students, sophomore Russ Reinbolt felt that the gym classes were a good way to release energy and get some exercise.

In gym class, one of the many indoor sports played is floor hockey, which sophomore Darrell Ansted is participating in.

Something for everyone

Trends have shown that the majority of today's young people have gone away from home to attend college or have obtained apartments if staying near home after graduation. Most students also expressed that although they plan to marry, marriage was not included in the near future. Independent living and marriage and family living were classes offered to prepare juniors and seniors for such future situations.

The marriage and family living course dealt with the preparation for married life as well as learning how to deal with problems once married.

To help simulate problem situations, the students performed pantomimes and role-played married couples. The pantomimes included acting out arguments to demonstrate points in various lectures. For example, as part of the defense mechanism lecture the students studied arguments to understand why people say what they say. According to senior Cap Averill, the lectures "help you realize what to expect and how to work the problems out once you are married."

Wedding bells rang as the marriage and family living classes participated in a wedding in which classmates were paired up with each other through questionnaires. The partners then wrote and planned the cost of a wedding before filling out marriage licenses for a ceremony held in the Little Theater with a reception following — complete with wedding cakes.

Senior Alec Suttie said that the wedding was a "very enlightening experience because it gave us an idea about all of the planning and worrying that goes into this very special occasion." Because the classes had more boys than girls, the extra boys role-played divorced men, both during and after the ceremony.

All of the major stages of marriage were discussed in the course including courtship, children, finding a home, budgeting, problem situations, compromising and human sexuality.

Eggs provided a unique way of introducing the responsibility of raising and caring for children. Each egg represented one child and the couples carried the eggs with them for one week and brought them to class every day.

Some students said that living on a budget and financing a marriage were a very important part of the course. "This course has changed my view about marriage because of all of the money involved," said senior Jeff Gochenhour.

For those couples who were not working out their problems, filing for divorce was an option. Averill filed for divorce "just to see how much hassle was involved." One of the male divorcees, Gochenhour, noted that he was surprised that more than half of the class didn't file for divorce because of the differences between mates.

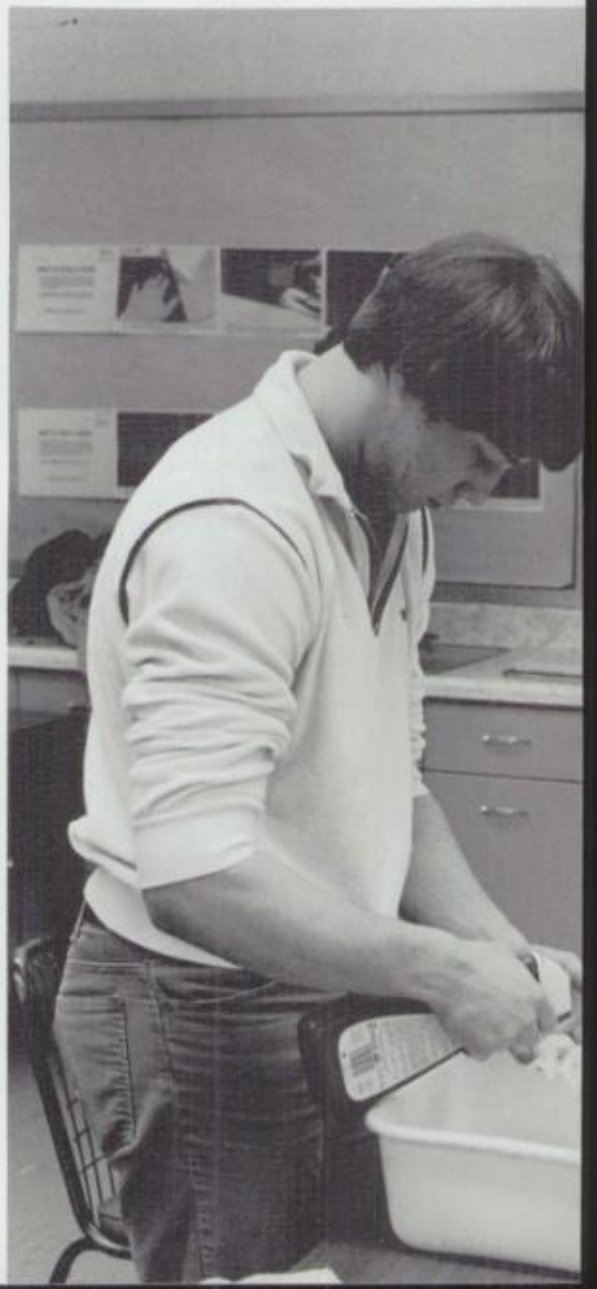

As these students experienced living with a mate, other juniors and seniors learned how to survive on their own. Students enrolled in the independent living course were taught the ways of single survival, including cooking, sewing, budgeting and finding a home.

On several Fridays throughout the year, the independent living students were assigned to cooking groups to plan and prepare various foods. Senior Donnie Smith felt this was a valuable part of the course. "I like to eat," he explained, "and this way I will be prepared to fix my own meals." So that the students would be familiar with fixing a large meal, a holiday dinner was prepared before winter vacation. The menu included rabbit, turkey, cornish hens, duck and roast beef as well as salads, stuffings and desserts.

Sewing and care of clothing was also covered during the course of the year. The students learned how to sew buttons and hems and brought clothes from home to repair. Proper washing methods for different types of clothing were taught by instructor Miss Shelley Brand.

To help students experience what living on a budget would be like, games were played in which each student was assigned a different budget to live within. Each student selected a source of income, figured a percentage of the income that could be spent, took out a loan and bought a house according to what he could afford.

Since many young people live in apartments before they buy a home, finding and budgeting an apartment was also discussed. The students learned how to furnish the apartment including arranging furniture, decorating and using space wisely. Although junior Sarah Stibbe said the only area which was beneficial was home technology in which rewiring and replacing windows were among the topics taught, the majority of the boys who took the course described it as practical and felt the course would help them in the future to survive independently.

Working with Mathew Stibbe is independent living student senior Paul Kontaratos.

Senior Larry Nearhood experiments with different fabrics as he learns how to remove stains.

Marriage and family living students Greg Grier, Becky Schwan, Alec Suttie, Linda Nickens, Bill Kepley and Laura Baxter prepare to take their vows.

Discussing the ceremony are juniors Chad Litten and Vince Cardon.

It happens every 4 years

Each year seniors take an American government course which teaches the essentials of a democracy, including the election process. 1980 offered many seniors and juniors a unique opportunity to get involved in the elections through activities such as canvassing, phoning, and voting.

Some seniors volunteered their free time to distribute literature for presidential candidates John Anderson and Ronald Reagan. Senior Steve Rothschild, who spent the summer of his senior year as a page for the House of Representatives, walked for Ronald Reagan canvassing votes and made phone calls to recruit people to help with the campaign as well as to see how they planned to vote. Senior Steve Haddad also distributed literature while seniors Robin Hess, Chris Lopinski and Kirsten Petre walked area neighborhoods distributing literature for independent John Anderson.

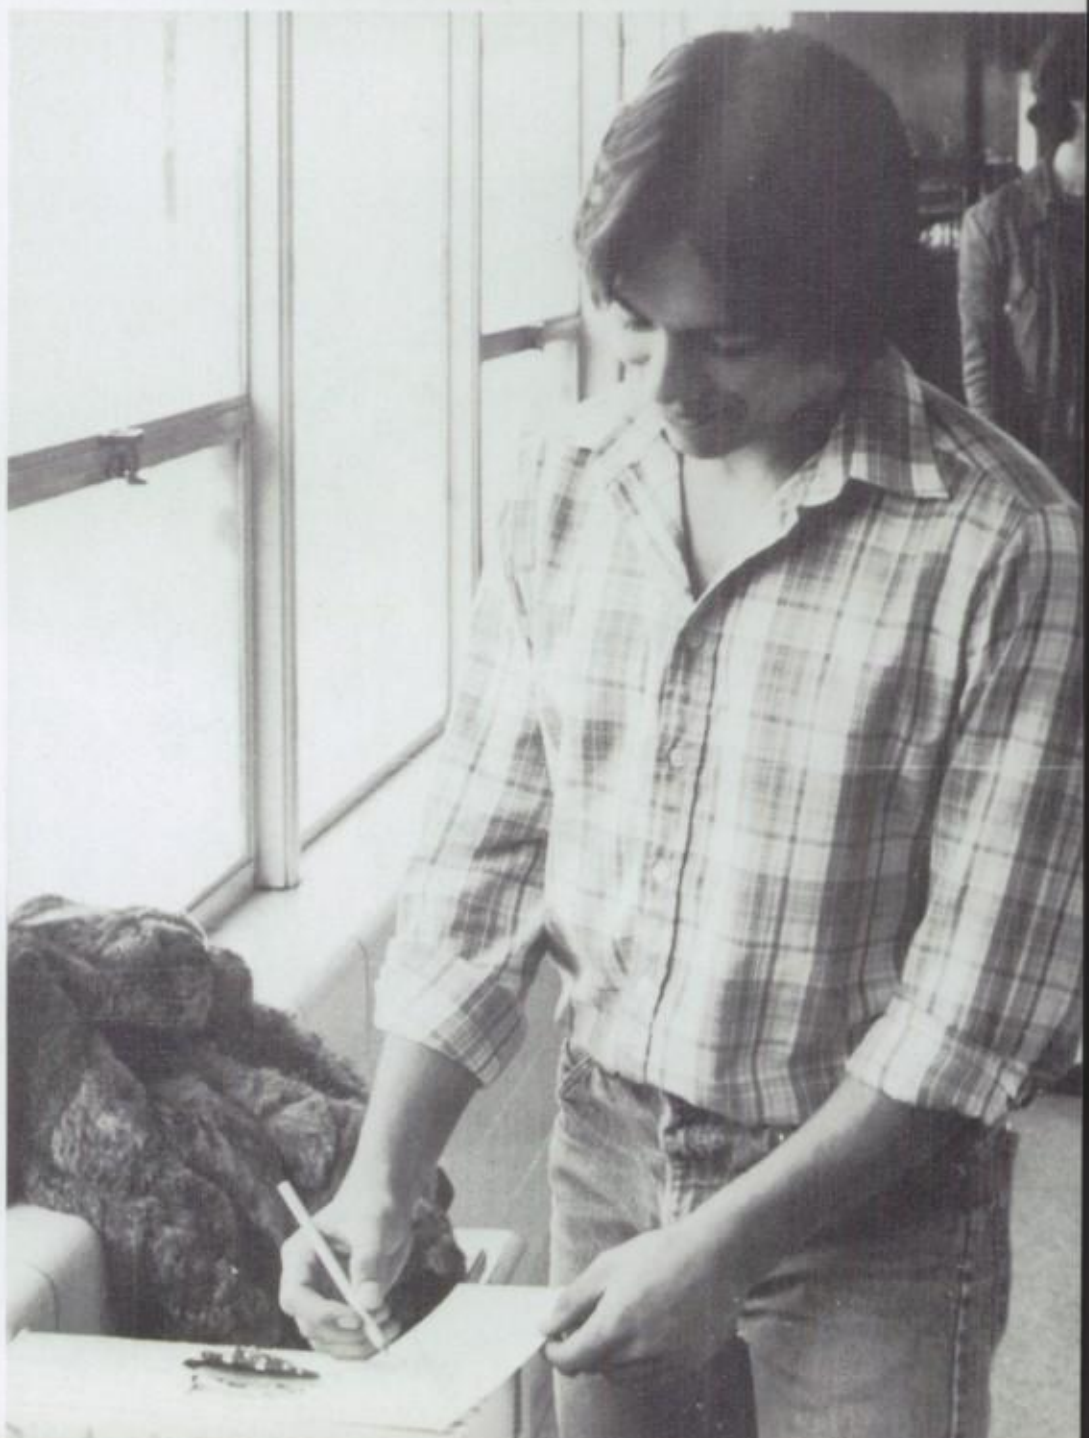

In October, Republican Ed Weber brought his campaign to government and economics classes. On Election Day, Mr. Weber was one of many Republicans in the nation to defeat a Democratic incumbent. Government and economics students helped the Weber campaign upset Congressman Lud Ashley by volunteering to make phone calls after school for three to four hour periods.

Other visits to Toledo were made by Republican vice-presidential candidate George Bush and independent John Anderson shortly before the election.

A mock election, held under the supervision of government instructor Mr. Wayne Mauk, closely paralleled the results of the voting public. Government students ran the election booths, which were located in the commons area and the lobby, throughout the day, checking students' ID's so no student could vote more than once.

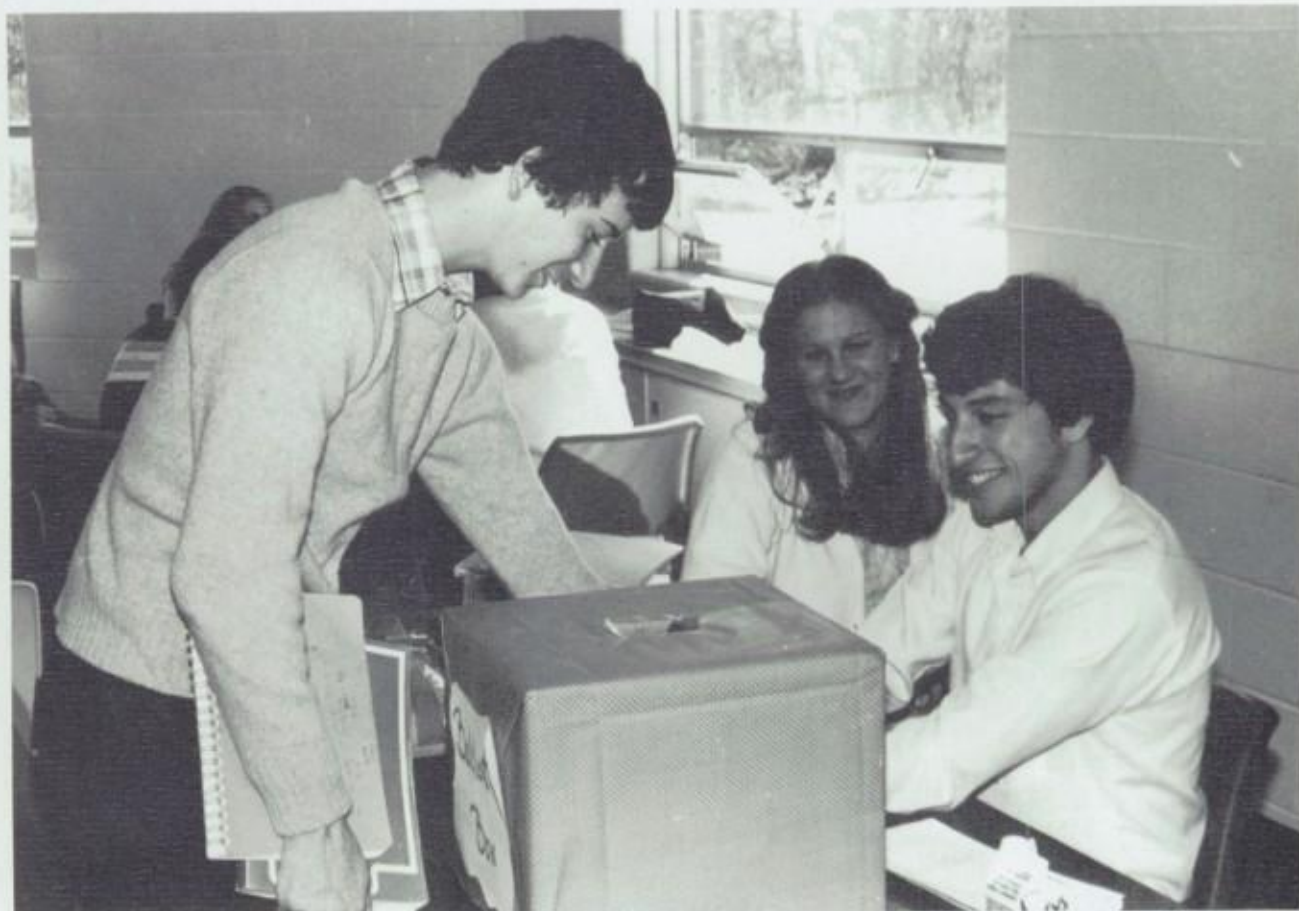

As in the national election, students expressed their disapproval by handily defeating both the presidential and congressional incumbents. A total of 354 juniors and seniors voted in the election with the following results:

President
John Anderson	86
Jimmy Carter	53
Ronald Reagan	191
U.S. Senate
Jim Betts	139
John Glenn	212
Congress
Lud Ashley	67
Ed Weber	287

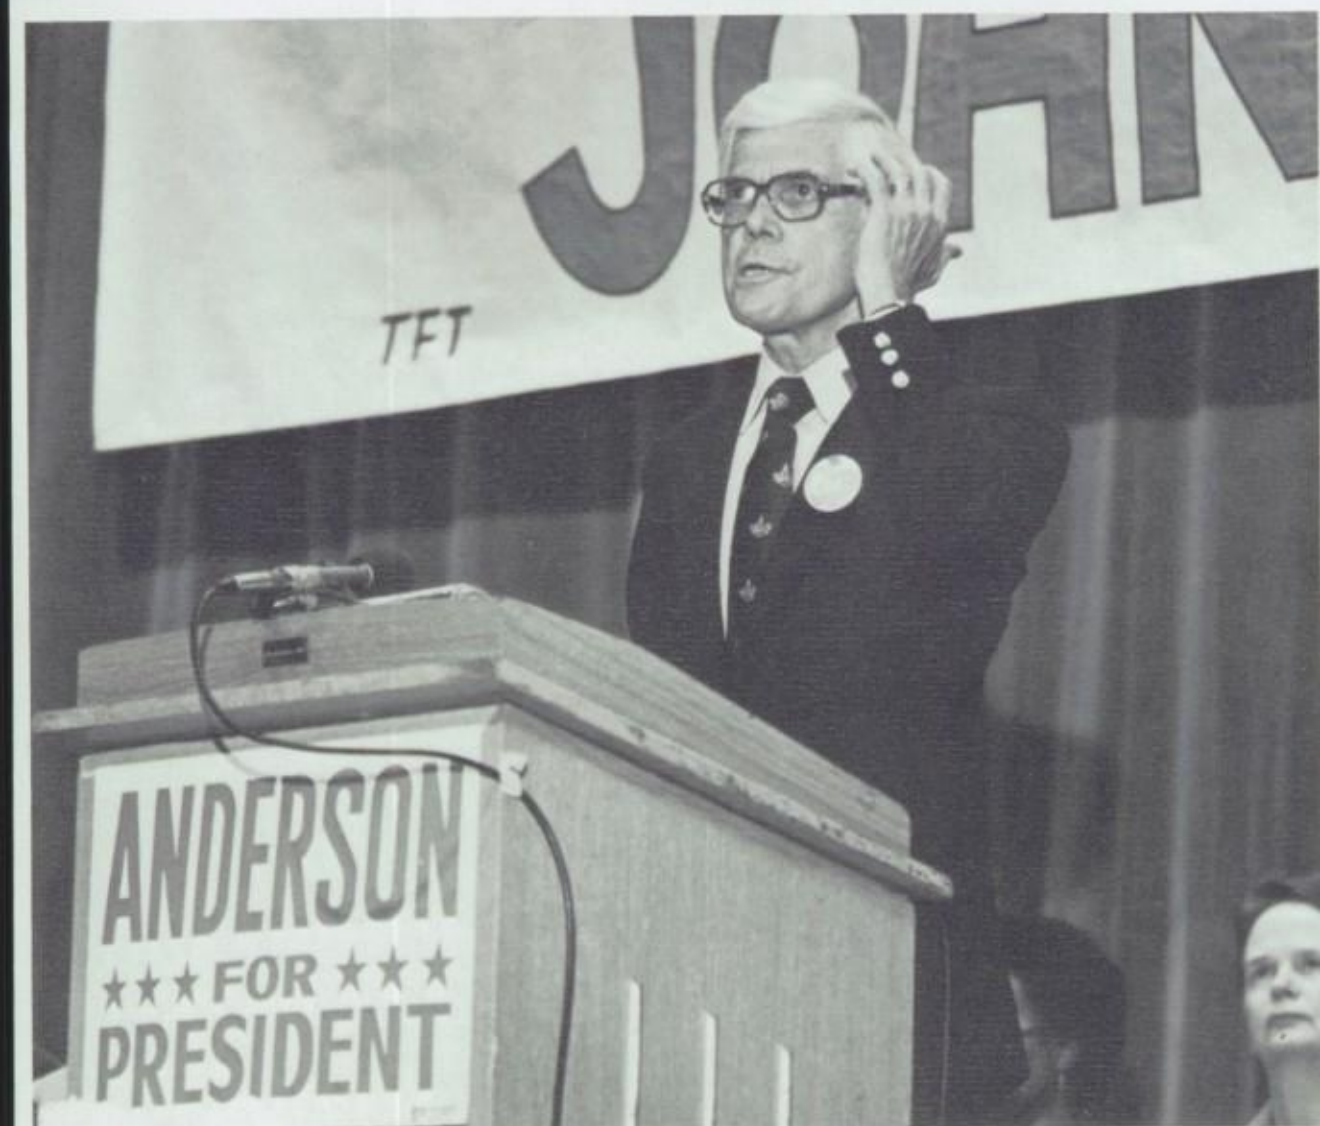

Taking a break from the usual class routine, seniors Martin McHugh, Brian Barnes, Scott Stewart and Kirsten Petre act out a skit during the seventh period government class.

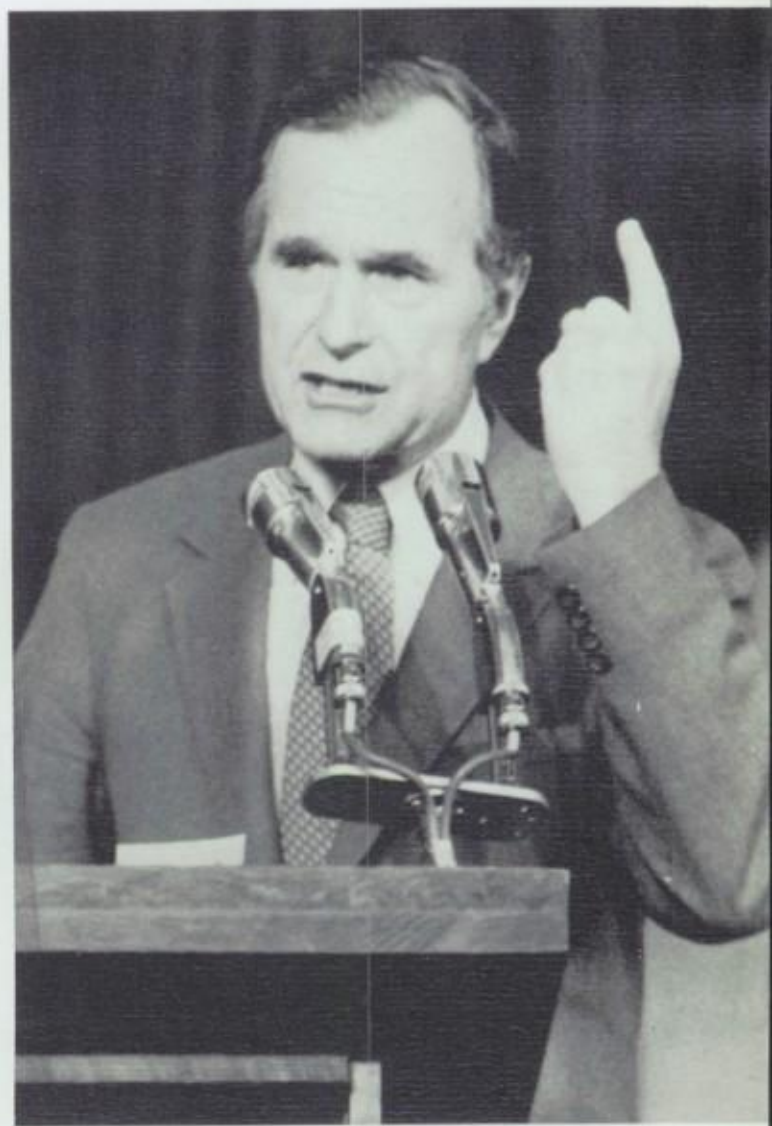

Casting a vote in the mock election is senior Paul Fine. Seniors Carrie Fanning and Steve Haddad work at the election table as part of their American Government assignment.

Senior Chris Schroom stops to mark his ballot before he returns to work at the election table.

Independent presidential candidate John Anderson visited Toledo as part of his mid-western campaign. Mr. Anderson spoke at Bowsher High School.

Vice-President-elect George Bush speaks at the Franklin Park Mall. Some of Northview's band played at the mall for the arrival of the candidate.

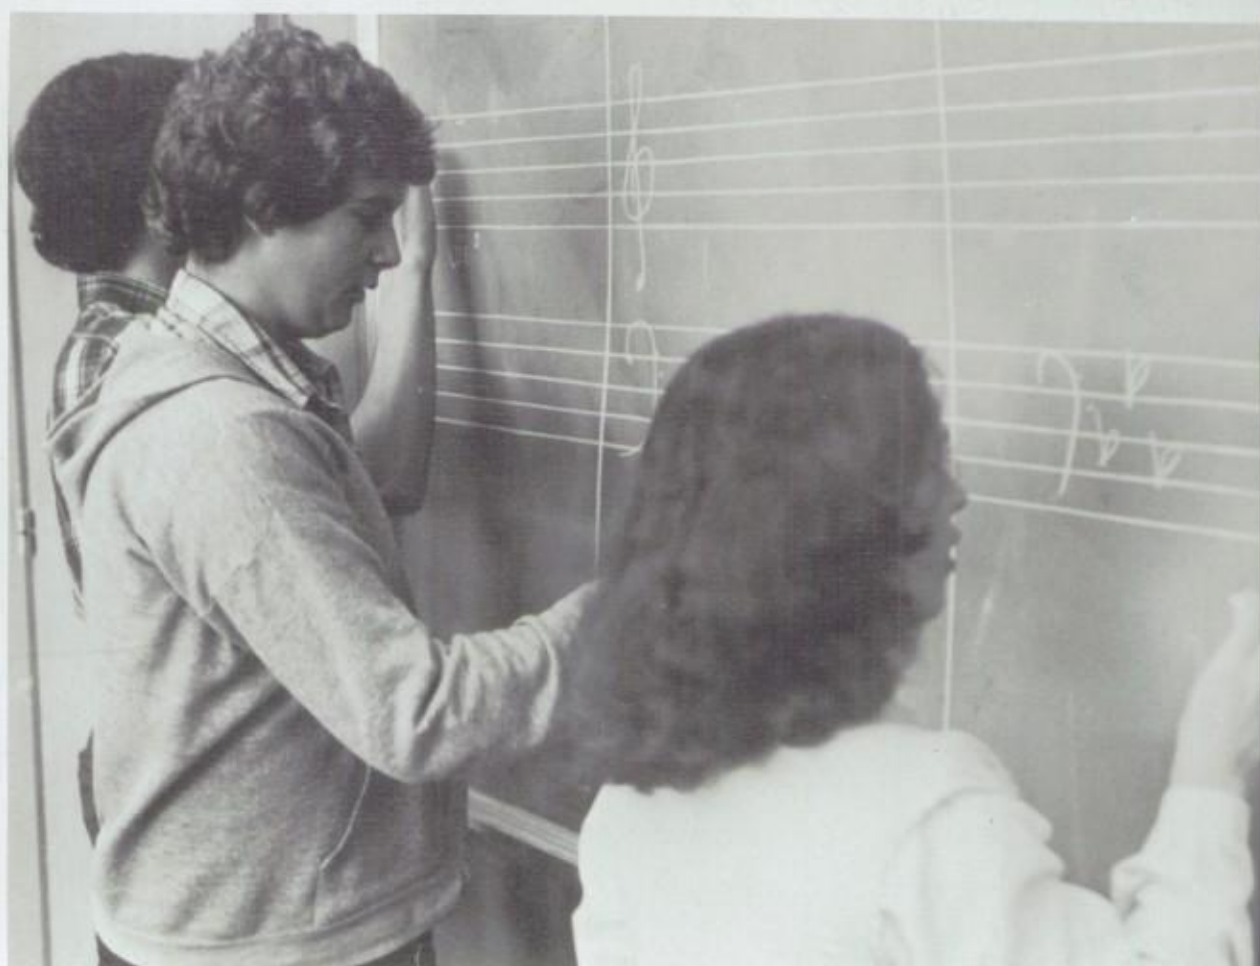

Learning to draw in perspective is an exercise used in all aspects of art which is taught in Art 1. Freshman Susan Lee is getting a few pointers from Mr. Don Townsend.

Holding still as make-up is applied for the Hansel and Gretel production is freshman Sue Konop.

Learning the fine art of make-up in a Drama 1 class is senior Dan DeLong.

The purpose of Music Theory is to help students learn the basics of composition. One must know the different major and minor keys, as sophomore Andy Seymour and sophomore Michele Workman demonstrate at the board.

The finer things in life

Broadway theaters, Picassos, Van Goghs, rock and rollers and creative dramatics — some of the finer things in life. What would the world be like without them?

Wait! Creative dramatics? How does that fit in? Well as one of the finer arts at Northview, this course offered students a chance to learn how to express themselves.

It was a new approach involving concentration, relaxation and breathing exercises. Mr. Mark Ferguson, drama and forensic coach, based his teaching on the belief that freeing people from inhibitions, fear and negative self-concept are the building blocks of creative dramatics. He held drama labs to help relieve students of stage fright by teaching them directly from the stage and having them work there.

"Drama is good to not only a serious student, but everyone. It's a good way for a shy person to overcome his shyness," said freshman Drama 1 student Sue Konop.

Not only was drama taught as a fine art, but the traditional art class was offered as well. Serving as a good preparatory course for those planning to major in art in college, students learned the tools with which to create an image. They experimented with different techniques in varying media such as clay, watercolor, pastles, airbrush and ink-washes to name a few.

Mr. Donald Townsend, the art instructor, didn't teach a specific technique or style, but let each of his students develop their own talent.

Talent was not only needed in art, but in music and music theory as well. Mr. Ben Ayling, the teacher of music theory, compares making music with learning to read. "First," he said, "one learns the letters of the alphabet, then puts the letters together to make words and sentences. The same applies to music. One learns the notes and musical scales to make musical phrases."

Music Theory was a class open to all students whether they wanted to learn more about music, or just wanted to enjoy it as a hobby.

These courses were designed to help each person develop his own skills, even though he may not be established on Broadway, in museums or on album covers as he may wish.

Senior composition class can be thought of as anything but funny; however, senior Steve Haddad seems to have a different idea.

Waiting to talk with Dr. Carolyn George about PSAT's are juniors Debby Orr and Jim Kontaratos.

Todd Monagham and Matt Romanoff review for their upcoming SAT's.

Better late than never

SAT's are one of the most important criteria that college admission boards look at when considering applications. Math and verbal portions make up a SAT, and the math scores have been consistently higher than the verbal at Northview.

This does not mean that the math department has been better than the English department, as Dr. Carolyn George said, but it does point to the fact that while freshmen may take specific math courses, only seniors and some juniors have been permitted to take advanced English courses. These courses included reading, grammar refresher and senior composition.

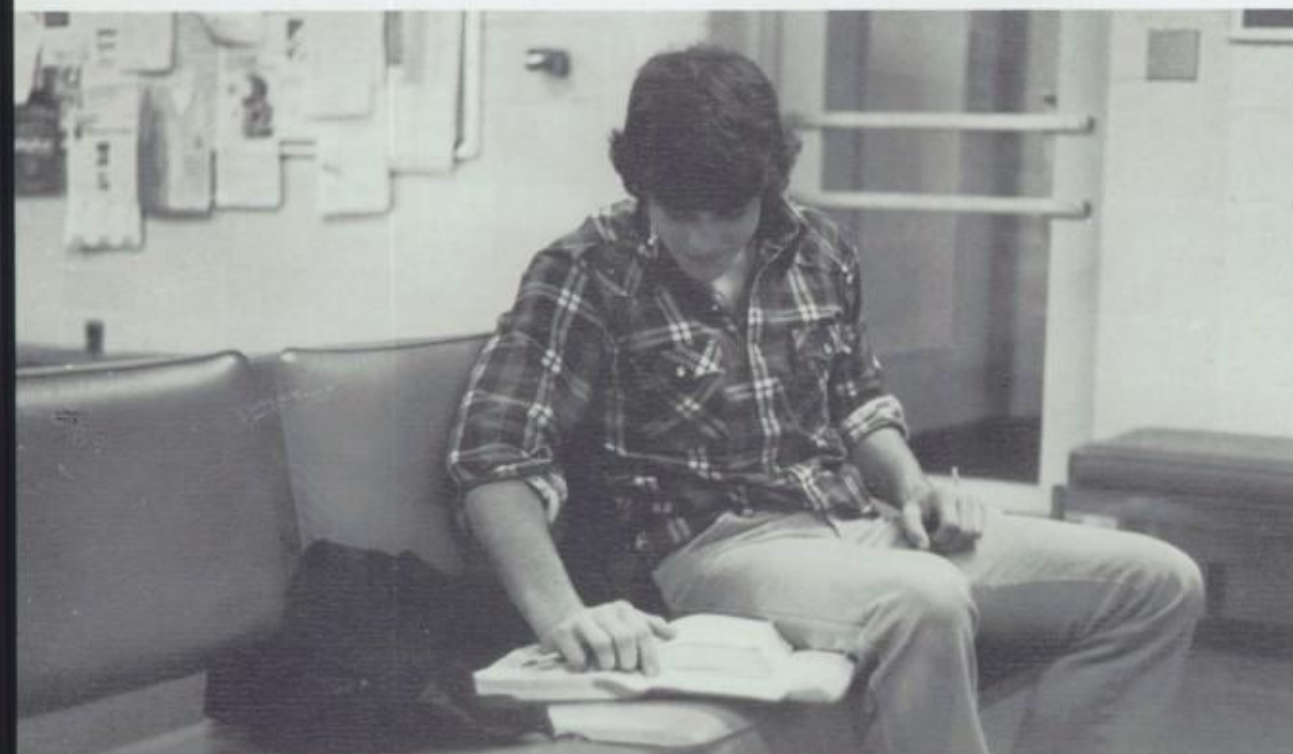

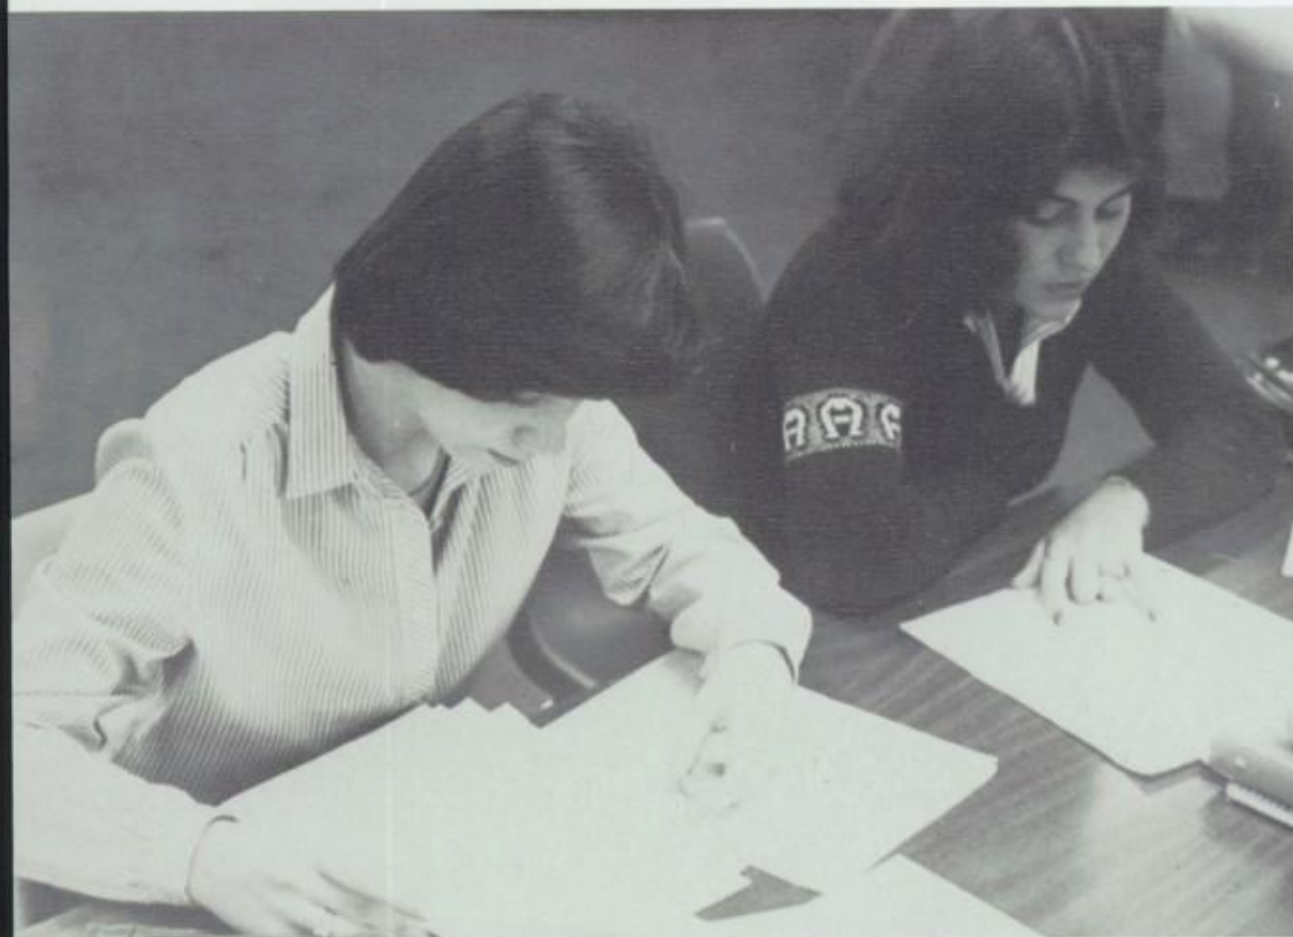

Vocabulary quizzes every Friday and compositions once a week are two of the many things a senior was required to complete in a senior composition class. These vocabulary quizzes were an attempt to broaden a student's vocabulary.

Unfortunately, students crammed the night or even the period before the quiz. This last minute studying may have led to high scores, yet they retained few of the words which might have helped to increase SAT scores.

For students who wished to prepare themselves for SAT's, pre-SAT testing was available during the junior year. Last year, some seniors got together and spent many hours reviewing previous schoolwork.

Statistics show that the national average for SAT scores has been slowly decreasing. But, Northview's averages have been higher, and, in fact, have been steadily increasing over the past four years.

The reading classes use modern equipment (above) to help students improve their reading skills.

Taking advantage of a few extra minutes in commons, seniors (above left), Liz Maxwell and Robin Hess do paperwork for an upcoming class.

Studying grammar in the guidance area is senior Mike Knupp.

Business life

If someone were asked to briefly describe a secretary, the answer would probably be a pretty woman who takes memos and files her nails. Likewise, the description of a businessman might have been a man who wears a three-piece suit and carries a briefcase to work.

Such stereotypes do not really hold true any longer, and nearly all students in Northview's DECA and IOE programs are learning the true meanings of the words.

The Distributive Education program, taught by Mr. Robert Minsel, included juniors and seniors. They spent one period a day in the classroom, with much of the time used to simulate a department store. A senior in DECA usually went to school for the first four periods, and then left for a job.

Having a job was not the only DECA extra-curricular activity, as everyone had chances to enter various contests throughout the year. Last fall in a contest that involved parliamentary law and procedure, senior Mike Moir placed second in the district, and among the top ten at state.

Students in DECA were even able to work as business people during school hours. The two supply stores in the school, where one could buy anything from The Scarlet Letter to a Mars candy bar, were run by DECA. The profits from the stores paid the various bills, and the rest went into the general fund.

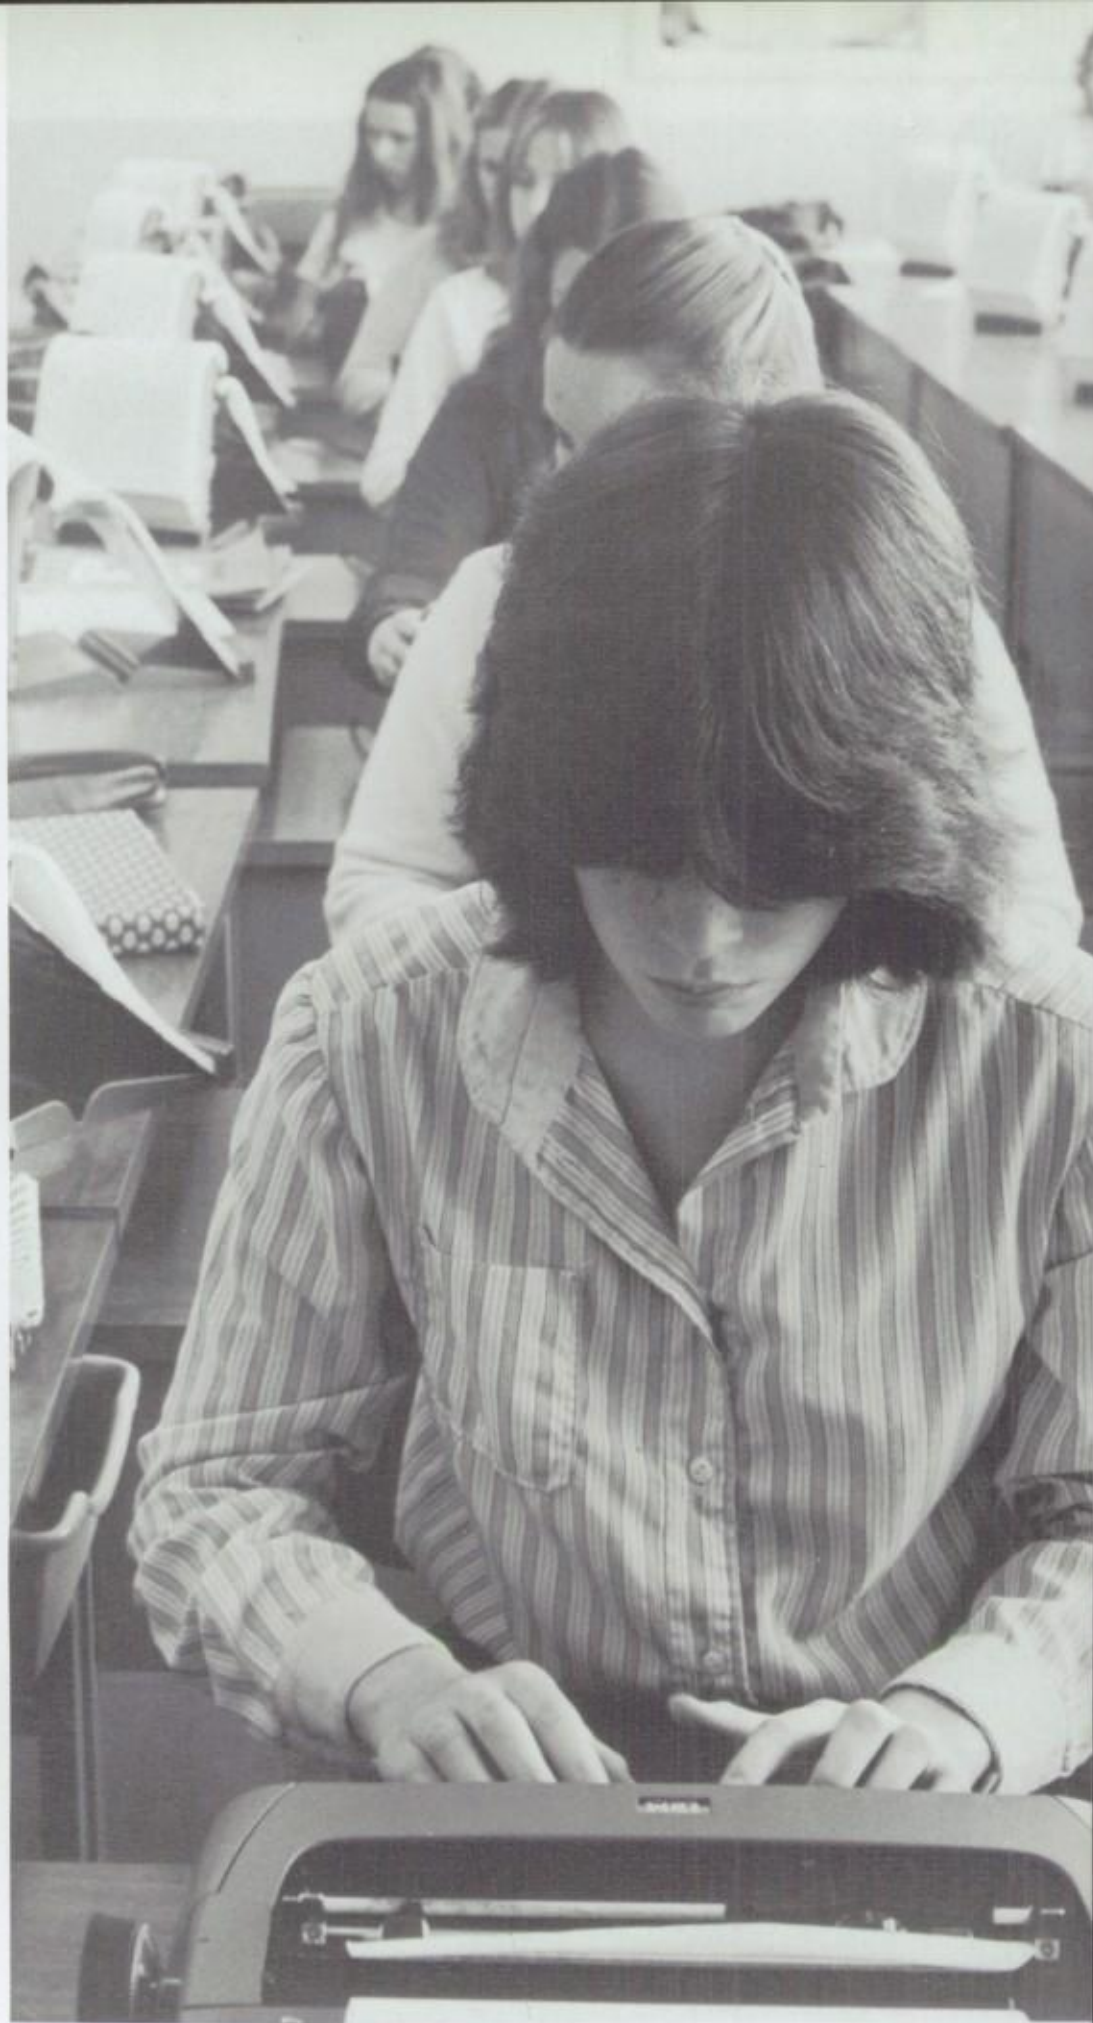

Another business course offered at Northview was Intensive Office Education (IOE), which is exactly what it sounds like. For three periods every day, juniors and seniors met to be trained as future secretaries.

With Typing I and Bookkeeping I as prerequisites, once in the classroom the students expanded on the basics. Operating office machines, advanced typing, filing, and advanced bookkeeping were also part of the program.

After completing high school, an IOE graduate can usually get a good paying job, according to teacher Mrs. Sandy Ducat. If it is desired, a one-year post-high school course may be taken to learn even more.

If someone said "secretary" right now, what would come to mind? Hopefully, a secretary is now a person who takes care of correspondence, keeps files and does clerical work. What about "businessman"? Surely he is not just a man in a suit with a briefcase anymore. Rather, he or she is a person who works to produce, handle or sell a product.

Northview's IOE and DECA courses are helping to put these over-used stereotypes to rest.

Practicing their typing for those future term papers, (far left), a long row of students work.

Business means interacting with people, and often a business person must work with others on an idea, as Carol Roberts and her DECA partners are doing.

Office machines come in many shapes and forms (center). Junior Dawn Fugate is working on one of them in IOE.

The DECA store (above) sells many school items to students. Sophomore Mia Schlievert was one of the workers.

Administration and Faculty

Comin' and Goin'

Teachers — hard working and dedicated. With the addition of 10 new teachers to the staff this year, it would seem that teaching is a growing profession. In reality, nine of those new teachers were replacements for those who had left.

Mr. Phil Sinkovich was one who left. As of Nov. 26, 1980, he retired as a teacher, not only from Northview, but permanently. He explained, "I needed an increase in my financial state, even though I enjoyed teaching." Mr. Sinkovich had been an American government teacher here for five years. He went into a business unrelated to teaching, and he was not alone.

Mrs. Rita Wright, a former vocational teacher at Northview left education for, what she believed would be a more financially promising career in real estate.

Most teachers seemed to enjoy their jobs though. "I really enjoy teaching and working with the students," explains Mrs. Linda Zabor, French teacher. "I have found it to be very boring to be stuck behind a desk every day."

Coaching football is one of Ron Wallace's hobbies, in addition to his job of teaching English.

Student Life

A break in the action

Following the same ol' grind everyday can become tedious without those breaks in the action generally counted on and looked forward to. From September 2, the first day of school, to final exams in June there was some type of day off to look forward to.

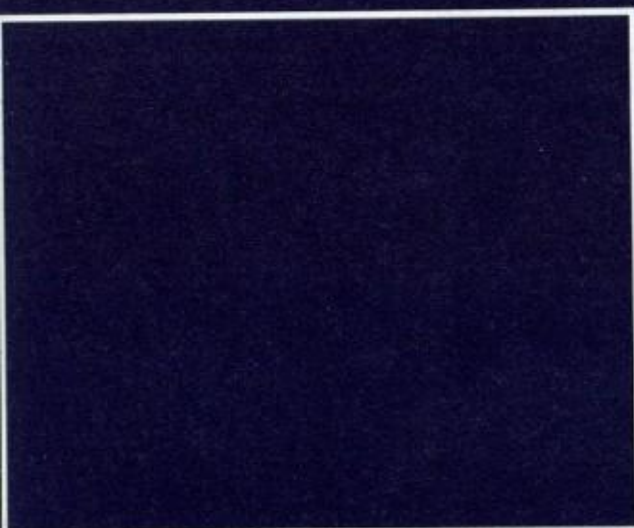

If the first "no school day" in October or Homecoming didn't provide a big enough break in the routine, then Thanksgiving weekend and a two week winter vacation were just around the corner.

For those students who couldn't wait for a vacation of any length, the weekends were always there. Friday in itself was generally a day to take it easy, and every other week a few minutes at the beginning of class could be used to glance at The Student Prints.

Once the football, basketball and hockey seasons were over, there was still something to do on Friday and Saturday night. If you didn't have anything special to do, a group of students could usually be found at McDonald's having a good time, right? No doubt about it, Mac's was the place to find out the who, what, where and when about weekends in Sylvania.

It wasn't just the weekends or the vacations that provided the break in routine. Daily, Northview students found ways to get away from it all during lunch, commons, or early dismissal.

At the end of the half of the Northview-Southview football game, senior varsity cheerleaders Chris Makowski, Cathy Culberson and Jenna Stack are pleased with a score of 6-0.

Sophomores Amy Keil and Libee Edgar help make signs to decorate the guys locker room before the Northview-Southview football game.

Fun in the sun

For some people, school started at 7:35 a.m. on Sept. 2. For many others, however, preparing for school began weeks before the first bells rang.

Athletes began practicing weeks prior to the first day of school. The football players, for example, began five-hour daily practices three weeks before the season opener on Friday, Aug. 29.

Both the cheerleaders and the marching band spent long hours preparing to cheer teams on during the year. For the band it meant practicing 2½ hours every day for two weeks.

"They were long and hot practices," said sophomore band member Gina Cooke, "but it all paid off at our Southview game halftime show."

The pep club members were also busy painting posters and getting ready for the first football game of the year against Southview.

In addition to the pep club, many other school groups were active this summer. Student Government had fund-raisers to get a head start on gathering money for school projects. Some of these were standard fund-raisers, such as the junior class garage sale. However, some fund-raisers were quite unusual.

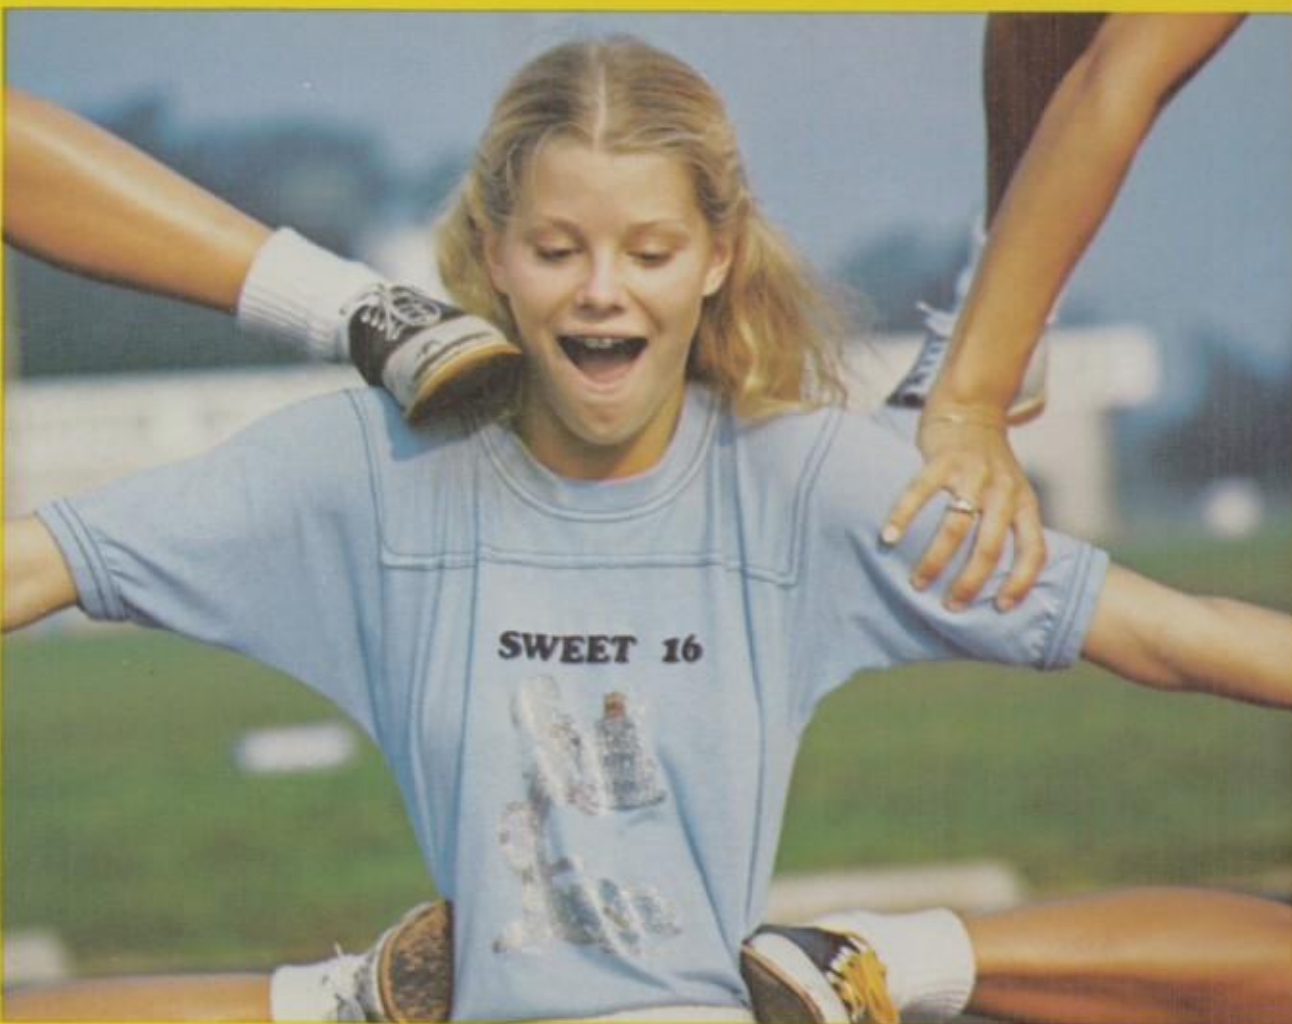

One out-of-the-ordinary method was the senior class party at the Pioneer Gun Club. By charging $2.50 admission at the door, they managed an $80 profit. Although this fund-raiser was not a school-sponsored event, it proved to be well worth the time spent preparing for it. After funds were raised, thought was given to Homecoming and the planning and building of the floats.

Another group of people who were quite busy before school started were the publications students. They sold advertisements to area businesses for The Wyandotte and The Student Prints.

While many less ambitious students soaked the final rays, or slept late those last few weeks, these students kept busy preparing for the 1980-81 school year.

During a summer practice, varsity and junior varsity cheerleading squads polish one of their more difficult mounts.

Senior Andy Wyatt (right) bites the dust.

Junior Kathy Frain spent many hours over the summer practicing cheerleading mounts.

In order to keep the band on a steady beat, junior Bill Young practices with the rest of marching band for two weeks before school starts.

Last summer, senior Cedric Dorcas spent many hours practicing the trombone.

More than a game

The Northview — Southview football game is one of the biggest rivalries of the year. However, this event is more than just a game. Many people put in extra effort to make it an event to remember.

The pep club and cheerleaders spent long hours in the summer making posters to help decorate the boys' locker room. These decorations were meant to help psyche up the players before playing their arch-rivals. In addition to poster painting, the pep club also baked cookies for the players to eat after the game. This is a tradition at Northview, and senior football player Scott Crockett said, "We really appreciate it."

Some students added to the spirit of the game by stealing Southview's spirit rock and painting it black and gold before placing it by the stadium for all the fans to see as they entered the game. Other students raised spirit by participating in a car caravan before the game.

There was a lot of student participation involved in the Northview — Southview game. This support didn't necessarily win the game, but it added greatly to the promotion of spirit.

An arch-rival rundown

Was your vacation this past summer a last minute one? If so, you probably missed the annual Northview — Southview football game.

The late August scheduling of the game was considered by many to be the reason for considerably less attendance than in previous years. The fans that did show up were clad in short-sleeved shirts, due to the warm weather; whereas, in past seasons, the cold temperatures required those in attendance to bundle up in sweaters and coats.

In the midst of the 80 degree weather, the Wildcat football team launched a successful opener against Southview on Aug. 29. The offense and defense worked together to defeat the rivals for the second year in a row, 13-6.

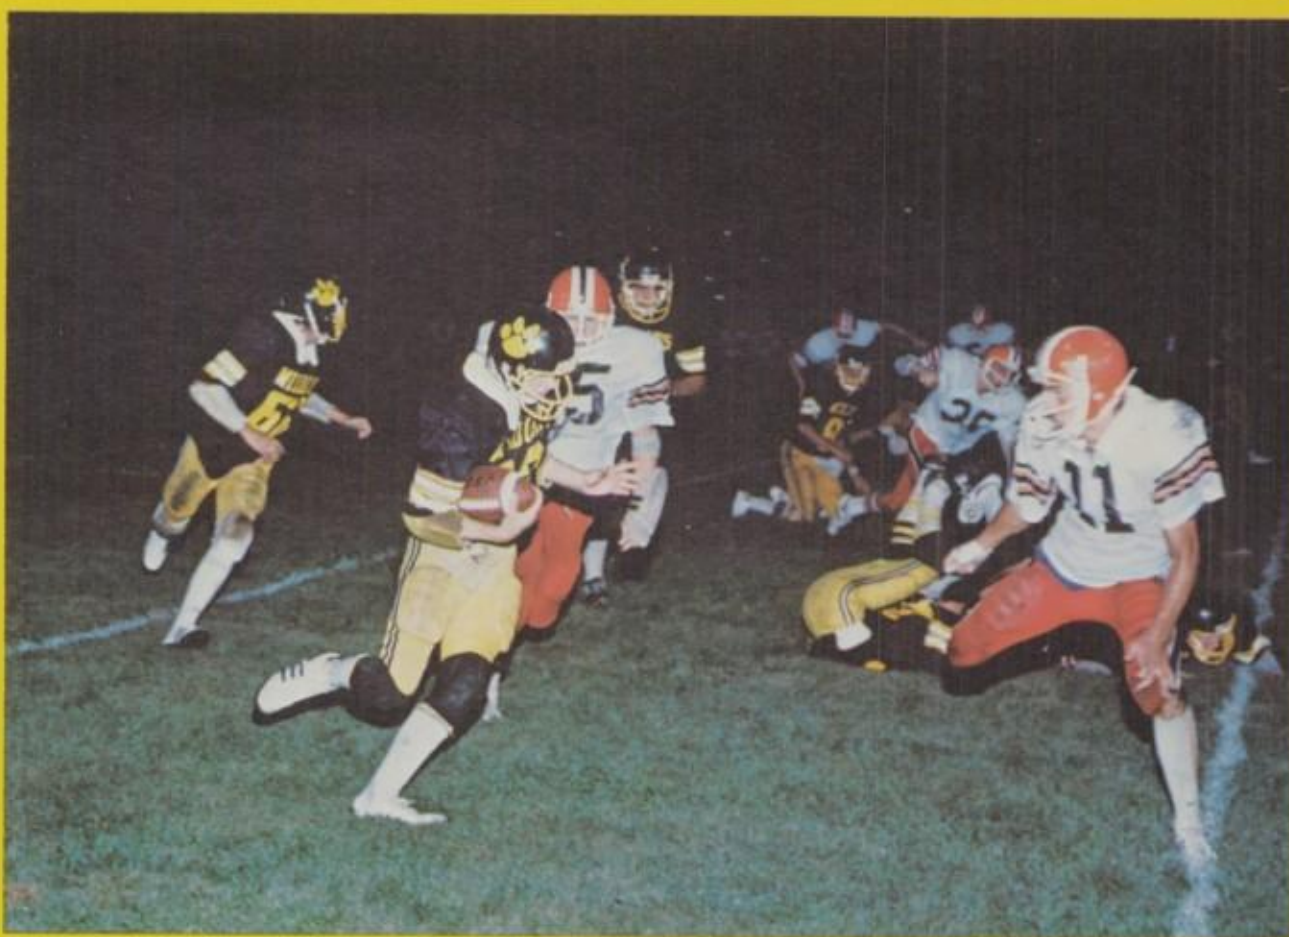

Although certain of a victory against the Cougars, senior Jeff Wilcox said, "We didn't play nearly as well as we could have, but we were very confident."

Major plays included senior Perry Overholser's two touchdown runs and the extra point scored by junior Ben Rowe.

The late August game proved to be a sampling of what became the most successful season Northview has ever had.

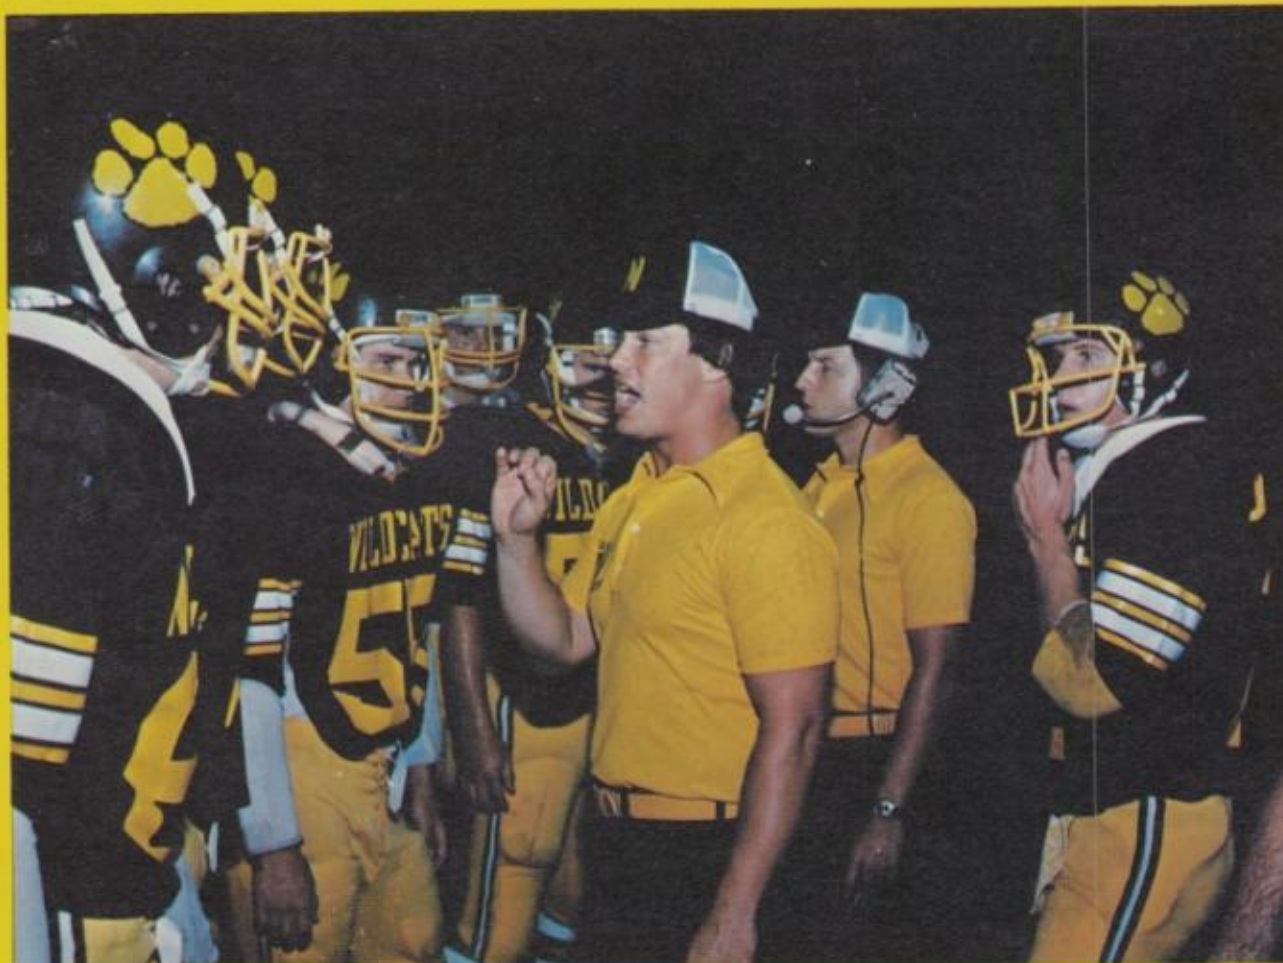

Leading the enthusiastic Wildcats, senior Donnie Smith jumps through the hoop.

Spirit on wheels

August 29. Cars honking and shouts of "Northview's #1" were heard throughout Sylvania. This was just the beginning of a full night of Wildcat spirit.

The spirit was shown early in the evening with a car caravan, organized by senior Jane Jennewine. The caravan left from the Jennewine house, which is located on Mitchaw Road — an ideal spot for the event, as it is secluded from Southview fans.

Jane said she was pleasantly surprised by the success of the caravan. "A lot more students showed up than I thought would," she said.

In fact, the Southview game caravan was so successful that a "spirit on wheels" encore was planned for the powderpuff game. The spirit was extended to float-building. Starting Sept. 1, students were busy using their after-school and weekend time working in barns throughout Sylvania. All of this work was in preparation for the night of Oct. 10.

With a Homecoming theme of "The Land Of Oz," the sophomore's float was a replica of Dorothy's home in Kansas. "It took a long time to decide what to make out of our float, because the theme was hard to work with," sophomore class president Stephanie Giha said. "I was happy with the results."

Similarly, the juniors attempted to work on the float at least three days a week. "The same people always worked on the float," junior class president Amy Hartnett said.

On the other hand, senior class president Dave Brown was quite pleased with the turnout of seniors helping to build the float. The senior float, the Emerald City castle, was constructed in Brown's barn, the site of the Class of '81's float construction for the past four years.

The freshmen were also involved with the Homecoming parade. Holding with tradition, they decorated a car, which carried their attendant Francis Huffman.

"In my opinion, the floats fit in well with the Homecoming theme," said Principal Roy Becker. "I was pleased with the overall outcome of Homecoming festivities."

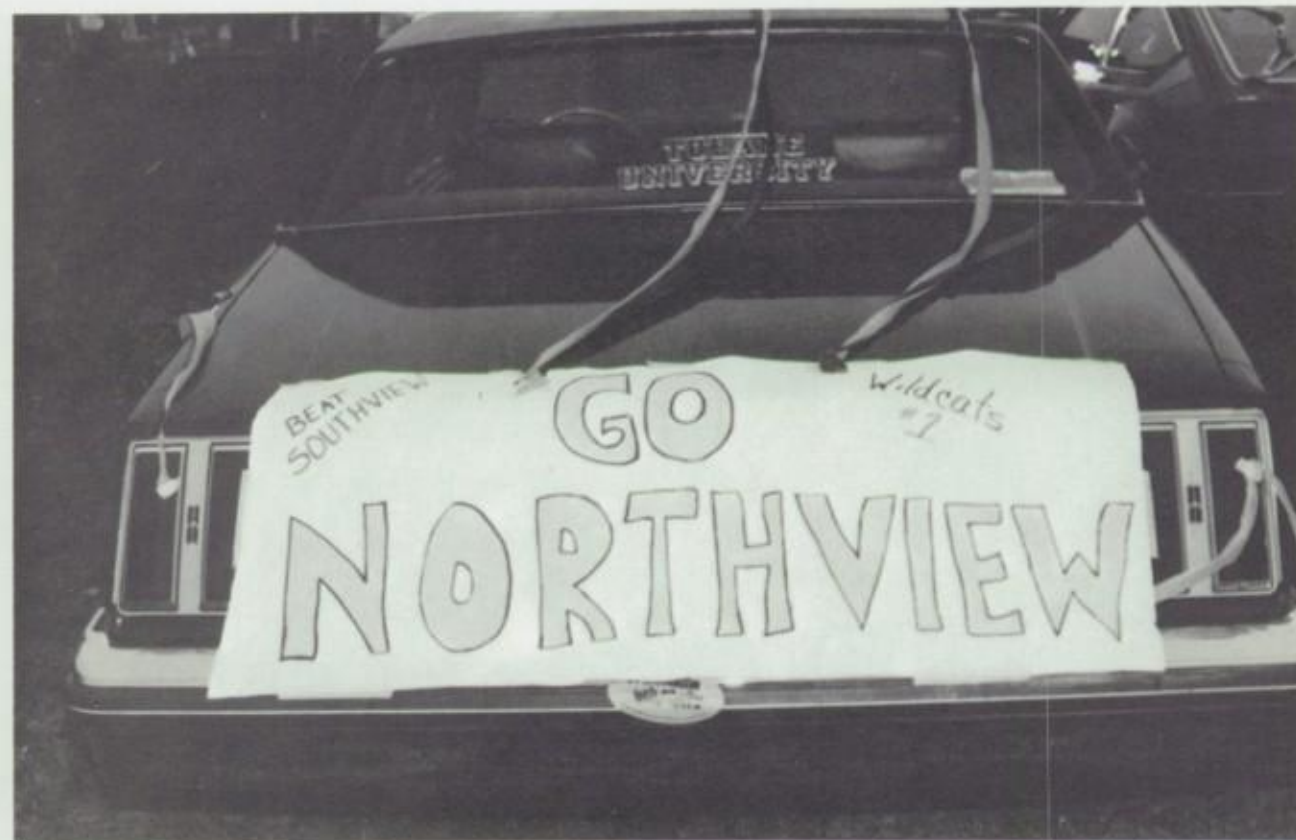

The car caravan drove across the practice field when it reached the school.

There's no place like Northview

Oct. 9, 1980. The excitement had been building for the annual Homecoming game since the beginning of school. This game was especially important because the Northview Wildcats, who were undefeated in the GLL, met the Clay Eagles, also unbeaten in the league. The winner would claim first place in the league standings. Unfortunately for both teams, the game ended in a 7-7 tie.

At halftime, the score was 7-0 in favor of the Wildcats. Even when the teams went into the locker rooms, there was still excitement on the field. Each of the three attendants, chosen by her class, rode a float, or a car, decorated by her classmates.

Riding in a 1920 Mercedes, the freshman attendant, Francis Huffman, escorted by freshman John Kupsy, began the parade around the track. Next came the sophomore and junior attendants and escorts riding on floats designed to go along with the chosen theme of "The Land of Oz."

Sophomore Sherry Wrest, escorted by junior Dale Emch, rode a float which was designed as Dorothy's home in Kansas. The junior float, showing Munchkinland, was ridden by junior Becky Broeker and her escort Charles Ide.

The senior court, consisting of Cathy Culberson, Amy Dedricks, Missy Dunbar, Dana Paskiet, Lorie Keating and Nancy Naeckel, traveled on the Emerald City Castle. Of these six girls, Dana Paskiet was chosen queen by her classmates. Sandy Wagner, 1979 Homecoming queen, presented Dana with her crown.

In keeping with the spirit of Homecoming, many people presented their dates with the traditional yellow mums. 170 mums were sold, with Student Government receiving the profits from the $2 mums.

In addition to the floats, the halftime festivities included the marching band in a show specifically designed to accompany the theme. The band put in overtime to ready songs such as "Somewhere Over the Rainbow."

The float builders, band, cheerleaders, football players, and fans all played a big part in making this game an event to remember.

Members of the senior court smile to the crowd as they ride around the track.

One of the highlights of the evening was the crowning of the Homecoming queen Dana Paskiet by the 1979 queen Sandy Wagner.

Dancing with Dorothy

Dance attendance is up — why?

At the time of Homecoming 1980, the price of gas was $1.09 a gallon. Not only was inflation evident at the pumps, but in everything from the price of three-piece suits to Homecoming bids as well. Still, more than 80 additional students attended this year's Homecoming dance than last year.

A lot of money was spent throughout Sylvania the week before Homecoming as dates set out to find needed apparel for the event. After figuring the price of a new suit, girl's flowers, dinner, bid and gas for one night, the total came to about $185. Gals, on the other hand, might have gotten off for approximately $60 for a dress and $3.50 for a boutonniere.

With all this expense, it was hard to reason why one would go to the dance. Senior Richard Kennedy said, "I've been to all the dances held at this school since freshman year, I just couldn't miss one now."

Tradition and new experience seemed to be the most popular reasons why the dance was so well-attended. By interviewing other Northview students, more opinions were gathered as to why they participated in the 1980 Homecoming dance.

Freshman Dave Gorny and sophomore Chris Mirgon. "It was the first real weekend of my high school life, I knew I'd have a good time," said Dave.

Junior Rocky Muszynski dances with sophomore Julie Weigele. "It comes up once a year — why worry about money?" Rocky responded.

Sophomore Mike Yoder and his date Ruth Mellin (far left). "I think the dance was a good investment, I'm looking forward to next year," Mike said.

"Being a senior, I figured it was my last year to go," said senior Dave Manzella (left).

Freshman Amy Bodkin (top right) and her date Mike Hall who said, "I wanted to get involved in high school activities."

"My date was worth it," junior Bob Schroder said of senior Amy Milliere (above).

Taking a break from dancing are freshmen Bob O'Neal and Sue Konop (middle). Bob said, "It's a change from the normal day-to-day activities, getting dressed up and eating something besides McDonalds."

Meeting to discuss the evening's events are juniors Stu Ogletree, Kathy Frain and freshman Cyndy Romanoff (above).

Seniors supreme

Way back in 1977 a new group of freshmen entered Northview. Shortly after the school year started, they were faced with the first project of their high school career — decorating a car to carry the freshman attendant during halftime of the Homecoming game.

In 1980, as seniors, the organization of the entire homecoming project fell on their shoulders. Not only did the seniors fulfill their own responsibilities of planning the event, they also tackled the job of decorating the commons for the Saturday night dance. In past years, this had been a Student Government project. This year, however, 12 seniors spent several hours doing the job themselves.

To add to the homecoming festivities, there was a senior car caravan for this year's powderpuff game that cruised through Sylvania an hour before the game. "We really had our work cut out for us when we saw the overall spirit of the juniors, but I really think we came out on top," senior Sue Davenport later said.

Adding spirit at the powderpuff game was a group of guys that cheered the senior girls on to victory. In addition, the coaching of Steve Haddad, Bob Jacobs, Dave Manzella, Doug Souers and Corky Rocco payed off as the game ended with a senior victory 37-18.

Proud of these accomplishments and others, senior class adviser Phil Sinkovich said, "The senior class is really energetic and interested in so much because there are so many different people who want to get involved, participate and help in various activities. They're the best group of kids to come through Northview since I've been here. They'll be greatly missed."

Raising the spirit of the powderpuff team are senior cheerleaders Matt Romanoff, Rick Daschner, Dave Brown, Todd Monaghan, Jon Benham, Bill Maxwell, Dave Powers and Pete Miller.

At a bonfire the night before the Homecoming game with Clay, senior running back Donnie Smith encouraged everyone to attend the game.

Senior powderpuff coach Steve Haddad (far left) watches anxiously as the senior girls come from behind to beat the junior girls.

Seniors Melodye Mueller, Julie Forrester, Carrie Fanning, Lisa Engen and Lisa Perkins (top right) added to the Land of Oz atmosphere by portraying the characters of the Land of Oz at the Homecoming game.

Bewitched wildcats

he final football game of the season fell on Oct. 31 this year. If one would look through the stadium, he wouldn't only see the football players dressed up. Some students decided to dress in their Halloween costumes for the game.

Before the game, several students went trick or treating. "A lot of parents think we're too old to go trick or treating but I think if you dress up, it's okay," said sophomore Jill Samaritoni. This seemed to be the opinion of many students.

Some students were dressed in their costumes for school. A pep assembly was held after second period to honor the football team's last game of the season. During this time, the cheerleaders had a costume contest. Three people from each class stood before a panel of judges to be scored on their costume.

Halloween proved to be an exciting and eventful day. The one time combination of the final football game and Halloween made an ordinary Friday not so ordinary.

Some students, including freshman Amy Richman, went trick or treating before the DeVilbiss game.

During a Halloween pep assembly, junior Jackie Zajac was chosen as one of the participants in the costume contest.

Hiding their true identities behind Halloween masks are freshmen John Cavanaugh, John Savolaine, Ward Rambo and Patrick Forrester.

Both Wildcat and Halloween Spirit were evidenced by freshmen Amy Petitt and Kristen Ansted.

Juniors Terri Schnee and Jody Hassen entered the Halloween costume contest with their brightly decorated jeans.

Smilin', stylin' and profilin'

The biggest decision some students have to make before going to bed at night is what to wear to school the next day. Some students grab the first outfit in reach while they're still half asleep in the morning. Maybe it was the shirt they wore last week but were too lazy to hang up. Methods for picking out the clothes were as different as the styles of clothes themselves.

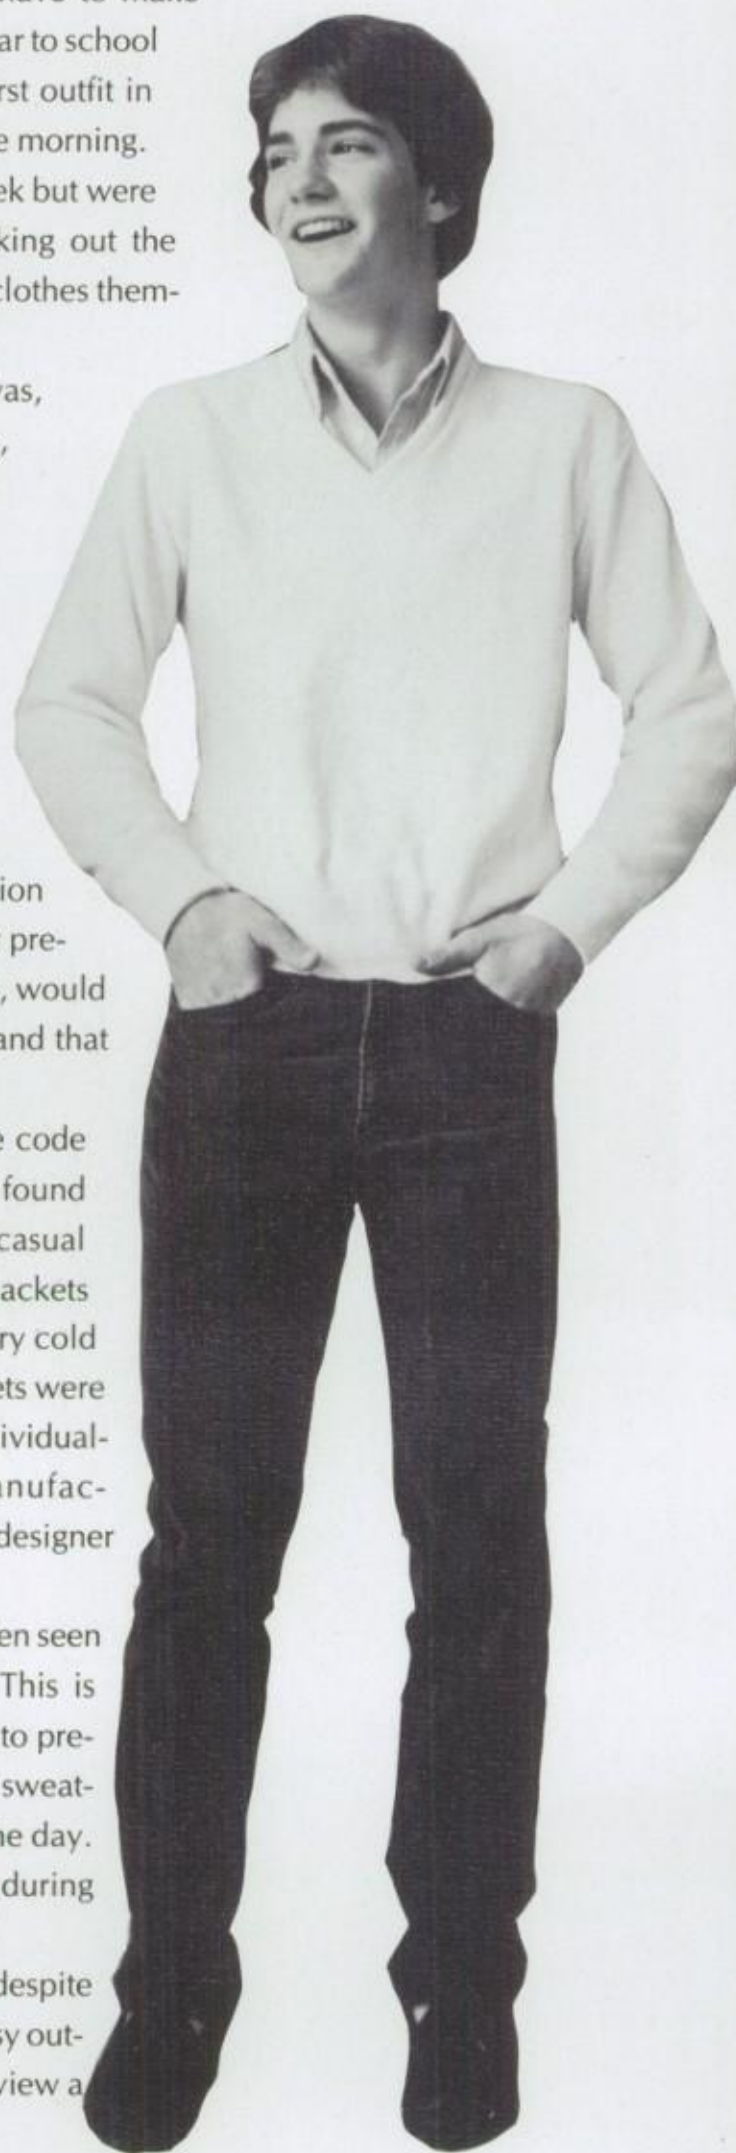

However, the style of shoes this year was, for the most part, unisex. Tennis shoes, docksides and penny loafers were worn quite often by both boys and girls. Another growing trend with boys and girls was cowboy boots. These were worn with just about everything from old jeans to skirts and dresses.

The "preppy look" was another style worn by both guys and girls. Button-down shirts, Izod sweaters, gas station pants and kilts are just a few of the many preppy styles this year. A true prep, however, would have an alligator key chain, or a headband that matches their watchband and purse.

Not everyone, however, followed the code of the Preppy Handbook. Many students found that jeans and jean jackets were a more casual and comfortable style of dressing. Jean jackets provided extra warmth to withstand a very cold smoking area in the winter. Several jackets were decorated in various ways expressing individuality and not advertising for the manufacturer. These labels were truly "designer originals."

Another casual type of dressing was often seen on Fridays and especially exam days. This is when students "dressed down" in order to prepare for a casual weekend. Very often sweatpants and sweatshirts were the dress of the day. Rarely was a skirt or a pair of nylons seen during a pep assembly or in an algebra exam.

Overall, students dressed similarly, despite some extremely casual or extremely dressy outfits. The various school fads made Northview a very fashionable school.

Freshmen Kim Johnson and Eric Hilfinger.

Senior Mike Kelly and junior Bob Napierala each display a common fad — cowboy boots.

Very often, especially on Fridays, students such as sophomore Scott Justen, wore sweatshirts and sweatpants.

Several girls, such as Wendy Wexler, had painted turtle necks. Many girls also carried Bermuda bags with interchangeable covers.

Designer jeans were very fashionable throughout the school. Freshman Vicki Shellabarger adds to her outfit with a Fair-Isle sweater.

The trend . . . not to spend

In the past, a popular form of weekend entertainment was to catch a good movie. Many students went with a group of friends or a date to relax and have a good time at the theaters. Sounds like fun, but can it still be afforded today?

Movies are still just as fun, but the price is unbelievably high. In most cinemas, admission is $3.90 per person. And if you plan on sharing a box of popcorn with your friend or your date, count on more.

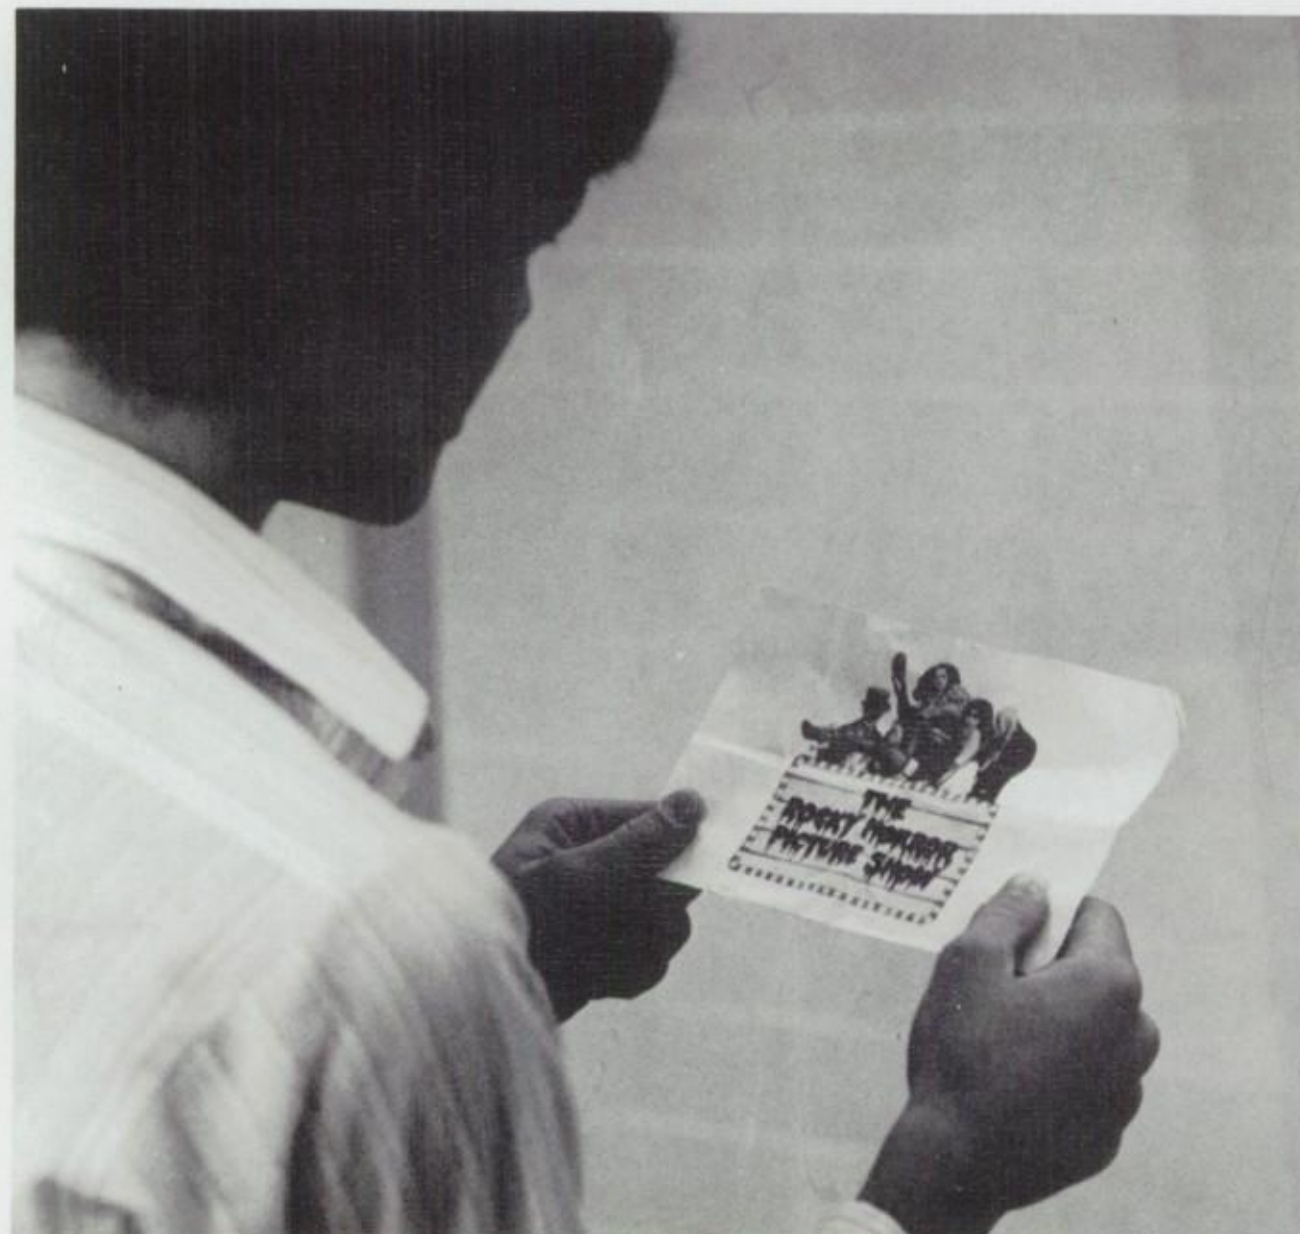

How do Northview students overcome this problem? Sophomore Laura Pirooz said, "I try to look younger and say I'm 14. Then, it only costs $1.50."

Some movie theaters, the Bedford and the Greenwood for example, cost only $1 for admission. However, the cost of gas to get to these bargain theaters hardly makes it worthwhile. Subscribers to Showtime, Home Box Office, Movie Channel and On, have another way to beat the high prices. These are home movie systems available for about $10 a month. First run movies are shown for about a month at a time, at different times during the day and night.

Another way to beat the movie prices is to see the Rocky Horror Picture Show. This is an "R" rated movie, but only costs $2.50. Many Northview students have seen this. It plays every Saturday at midnight. The audience often participates in the movie by throwing rice, using squirt guns or doing the "time warp," a popular dance in the movie.

For many years Northview students have been putting up with the price of movies. It's still an entertaining activity, but when you're low on cash, it's good to have a few alternatives.

This Saturday night's activity could be a movie at the Westwood. Sophomore Dan Couturier may go see the Rocky Horror Picture Show.

Sophomore Gina Koester will only have to pay $1.50 if she (and her pigtails) can convince the ticket seller that she is only 14.

It costs $3.90 each for juniors Dian Meinke and Linda Leadbetter to see a movie. It would cost $4.80 a piece if they each wanted to enjoy a small popcorn with the movie.

Seen here with a few items needed to make the Rocky Horror Picture Show complete are juniors Candy Boardman and Mary Bekos.

Swinging with holiday spirit

Hey gals, would you ever ask a guy for a date? Many girls might answer "yes" now, but it would have been unheard of 10 years ago. Well this is the 1980s, so look out guys. Girls are different than they used to be — some are even beginning to ask guys for a date.

However, the trend didn't appear to catch on for the Holiday Dance. Many think that the lack of attendance was because it was a girls-ask-guys dance. "Who has enough money around Christmas time to treat a guy to dinner and buy a new dress?" junior Sara Hilfinger asked. "Besides, there wasn't anyone that I really wanted to ask."

There was also another problem this year: a hockey game and a wrestling tournament were also scheduled for Dec. 13, the same date as the dance. Student Government President Robin Hess said, "It worked out okay for the hockey players because they just came directly after their game, but the wrestlers had to miss the dance."

Although the attendance may have been down, the overall organization for the dance was outstanding. Student Government members worked for hours after school on Friday to complete the decorations for Saturday night. The theme of the dance, "The Most Wonderful Time of the Year," was displayed by a mural that hung on the commons wall. Also included in the decor were a small pond and two Christmas trees surrounded by presents. Gold and silver snowflakes, stars, holly and mistletoe hung from the ceiling and snowy windows enhanced the "wintery" feeling.

"I don't usually notice decorations at a dance, but they were the best I have ever seen and they were definitely noticed," junior Jennifer Walters said. Poinsettias were sold beforehand to the parents of student government members so they could be used as decorations at a minimal cost.

"Even though attendance dropped, those who attended seemed to have a 'Most Wonderful Time,'" senior Bill Keply said.

Suits were popular for both guys and girls this year as seen here on freshman Tom Kennedy and sophomores Rosie Gorman, Marilyn Johnson and Mark Due.

Although the band was a punk rock band, junior Bob Single and sophomore Biz Krawetz stuck to the traditional dance steps.

Northview Punks

Although students have not begun dyeing their hair or wearing flower pots on their heads yet, new wave appears to have become increasingly popular this year.

Inside Straight, the Holiday Dance band, was just one example of the trend. Although they did not have the excellent quality of a superior new wave band, their image gave a new twist to a traditional rock dance. This pseudopunk rock band was similar to Devo and the Sex Pistols in their intentionally sloppy dress style. The baggie pants, ragged shirts and tennis shoes provided a new wave appearance, and an occasional song with a definite, bouncy beat suggested their punk sound.

Senior Richard Kennedy models the latest in "Punk" rock.

Student Government supplied the cookies and punch for the refreshment stand which is being used by freshman Jon Cavanaugh and others.

Runnin' on empty

With the high price of gasoline and cars, how were Northview students able to afford to get around?

The price of new cars skyrocketed approximately $1,000 in two years. For example, a 1981 Firebird sold for $7,000 this year. Two years ago, the same car sold for $6,000. Similarly, from September 1980 to January 1981, the price of gas rose 8 cents, from $1.09 a gallon to $1.17 a gallon.

Although cars were expensive, the majority of driving-age students depended on having a car at all times. "I don't know what I'd do without a car," junior Jay Romanoff said. "I'd stay home all of the time."

Staying home was a last alternative for junior Tom Starks. He works for the school system after school as an electrical technician. "The only way I can keep my car is by working, I pay for everything having to do with my car."

Generally, most student car owners had to pay for a portion of their car and its upkeep. Senior Joy Heninger said her parents made it a little easier for her by helping with car payments.

Having so many student car owners created a crowded parking lot. As a result, only limited students were allowed to use the student lot. Still, 203 students found the money to drive to school.

Forced to pay the raise in the price of gas is junior Todd Seymour.

"The only logical way to cut down over-population in the parking lot is to restrict some students from parking here," said assistant principal Robert Heiman (middle).

Considering the prospect of buying a new car is sophomore Jeff Johnson.

Grandma Fuzz

To be sure only authorized students and adults used the parking facilities, the school hired a Wackenhut guard, "Grandma Fuzz," as she preferred to be called. (It was against company policy to reveal her real name.)

She received the name "Grandma Fuzz" from her granddaughter. "There is an Uncle Fuzz in our family who just hates his name, so, teasingly, my granddaughter began calling me 'Grandma Fuzz,'" she said.

As she worked all day long with Northview students, she heard all sorts of excuses. "One of the most difficult situations is with twins," she says. "Often times, one of them has an early dismissal pass and one doesn't. Unfortunately, I can't tell them apart, and, consequently, they can leave without my knowing."

Athletic pep assemblies were held to attempt to increase school spirit. The varsity basketball team was honored at this assembly.

"Karnac the Great" came to Northview, with the help of seniors Steve Haddad and Steve Rothschild.

This is it

Hardly two weeks went by without an assembly. This was quite a change from last year, when two months could go by without any mention of an assembly. Part of the explanation for this was the cost, according to Principal Roy Becker. The assemblies of every group cost between $100 and $200.

Generally, each assembly was only viewed by two classes in the Little Theater, which offered better control over the students. The control, however, was questioned by the rudeness of some students at the assemblies. This created controversy as to whether some of the assemblies were actually enjoyed. "Students aren't attentive during some of the better assemblies," secretary Joanne Ersham said. "Because of this, many groups won't return."

Unfortunately, many students enjoyed the assemblies solely because they were a way to get out of class or to shorten class periods. For seniors, assemblies only made the day longer. "I would prefer not to have assemblies, so I can leave earlier in the day," said senior Rick Daschner.

The majority of the guest performances were musical and came from such varied locations as Cedar Point and Princeton, New Jersey.

The Nassoons from Princeton University were by far the most popular group, especially for the girls in the audience. This men's chorus sang a wide variety of songs a capella.

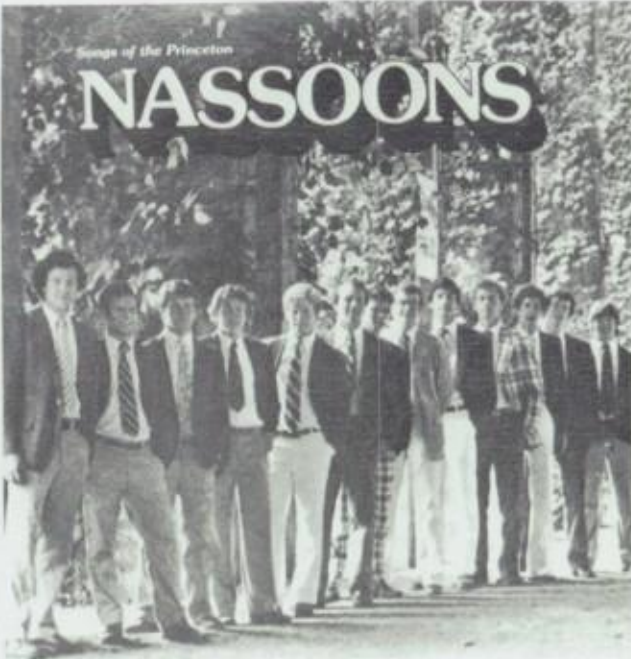

Slightly closer to home, "The Amazement Park Revue" came from Cedar Point. In addition to the musical assemblies were pep assemblies open to all Northview students. These assemblies were designed to promote spirit for athletic events.

The pep band played songs at the pep assemblies (middle), directed by Mr. Tom Watson.

Slow ride — take it easy

6:00 — Joe Student wakes up and gets ready for school. 7:35 — He starts his school day which includes three tests and a load of homework. Joe also had to stay after school for two meetings and detention hall. This sounds like a pretty busy day. Most students, somehow, seemed to find a bit of free time, even during the most hectic days.

When Joe woke up in the morning to get ready for school, he, along with many other students, woke to the voices of Pat Still and Jane Perry on the FM-104 Morning Show. Approximately 15,000 listeners tune in to Pat and Jane every morning. The Monday Morning Comics, Tabloid Trash, Friday Talent Search and the Joke-Off, were some popular segments between the hours of 5:00 and 10:00 a.m.

When Joe got to school each morning he took advantage of the smoking area. Many students went to the area outside of B or E hall to have a cigarette before school and between classes. The addition of the smoking area nearly eliminated the problem of smoking inside the school building.

Most sophomores, juniors and seniors had a commons period at some time during the day. Many students saved their homework for this period, but wound up playing cards, talking or eating. Commons provided a needed break during the day, and it was something most freshmen had to look forward to.

Even during the busy days, whether it was in the morning, between classes or a commons period, students always found that needed break in the day.

When people wake up in the morning and turn on FM 104, they often hear the voice of disc jockey, Pat Still.

Weekends are made for . . .

By far, the most energetic day of the week for all students was Friday. Talk of weekend plans was heard throughout the day.

Evening weekend festivities usually entailed an athletic event of some kind: the most popular being the football, hockey and basketball games. These events provided entertainment for only a couple of hours, however, and there were often problems in finding something to do afterward. On some nights, students attended a hockey game right after a basketball game and that concluded the evening. But, if all else failed, McDonalds became populated with Northview students.

While the majority of the people were out having a good time, there was a small group that sometimes was not — the freshmen. They were generally not seen on weekends because of transportation problems. Parents, brothers and sisters were often their only source of transportation. Many freshmen were forced to spend the weekend nights at home in front of the television.

Although upperclassmen were able to go wherever they wanted, the problem of nothing to do often arose. "I guess the only answer was to go out and eat and maybe to a movie, but that was only if and when you had the money," said senior Kelly Breese. "It was such a bummer when you looked forward to the weekends, but when they came there was nothing to do and you spent Saturday night bored to death."

As many of the seniors became 18, visiting the local bars became an alternative. Like a party, bars offered students a place to meet and socialize for the entire evening.

Whether students found something to do or not, their weekends were always a welcome change from the school week. "Weekends gave me a chance to either get caught up on my homework, or blow it off," junior Craig Moeller said.

Freshman Chris Peterson and little brother Paul jam with their almost air guitars on Saturday night.

Games people play

At Northview parties, many different activities took place. Many people chose to relax and enjoy talking with friends. Others, however, enjoyed playing party games, the most popular being quarters.

Quarters is played with a full glass of some type of beverage placed in the middle of a flat surface, preferably a table. The object of the game is to bounce a quarter off the table and into the glass, forcing the player at his side to chug-a-lug from the glass.

If one sat next to a particularly skilled player, it frequently became necessary for players to drop out of the game.

Mastering the game quarters are juniors Kelly Broadway and Cindy Dunbar. This type of event took place at the homes of students on Friday or Saturday nights.

Tam O'Shanter provided two hours (between 11 p.m. and 1 a.m.) of ice skating fun on Friday nights.

Takin' care of business

Who would have thought that serving meals to retired people and washing silverware would put someone through college? Well for senior Vicki Jones, who works at the Crestview Apartments as a general kitchen worker, this job really paid off.

According to a sociology class survey, earning money for college educations was the most important reason for students to get jobs. "I worked so many hours that I barely had time to do homework much less anything else, but I made enough money to pay for my college education," Vicki said.

The second most important reason for after school jobs was to cover the rising costs of gasoline. "With the few hours that I worked, I just made enough to fill up my tank and pay for weekend activities," said senior Desi Kuchers who works at Dura Magnetics in Sylvania.

The last important reason for jobs was for entertainment expenses such as weekend parties or sports events.

Although most of the work force was comprised of seniors, there were some juniors who also held jobs. "It was great to have a little extra cash when I needed it," junior Eileen Boyle said. Eileen worked at the Cable Car in Sylvania.

A number of students with jobs worked with friends or acquaintances from Northview. The most popular work spots were Churchill's, Lindau's, Bill Knapp's and the York Steak House. This sometimes presented problems for the employers of these businesses. Because so many students from Northview worked at the same place, employers were faced with the problem of too many people asking off for the same day or night to attend school functions.

"We sometimes had to take turns asking off for certain nights," explained senior Richard Kennedy who worked at Churchill's.

Whether students needed these after school jobs for their college educations, gasoline or just for a little spending money, the fact remains that they were sacrificing time that might have been spent studying or just goofing around, in order to afford things of a higher priority.

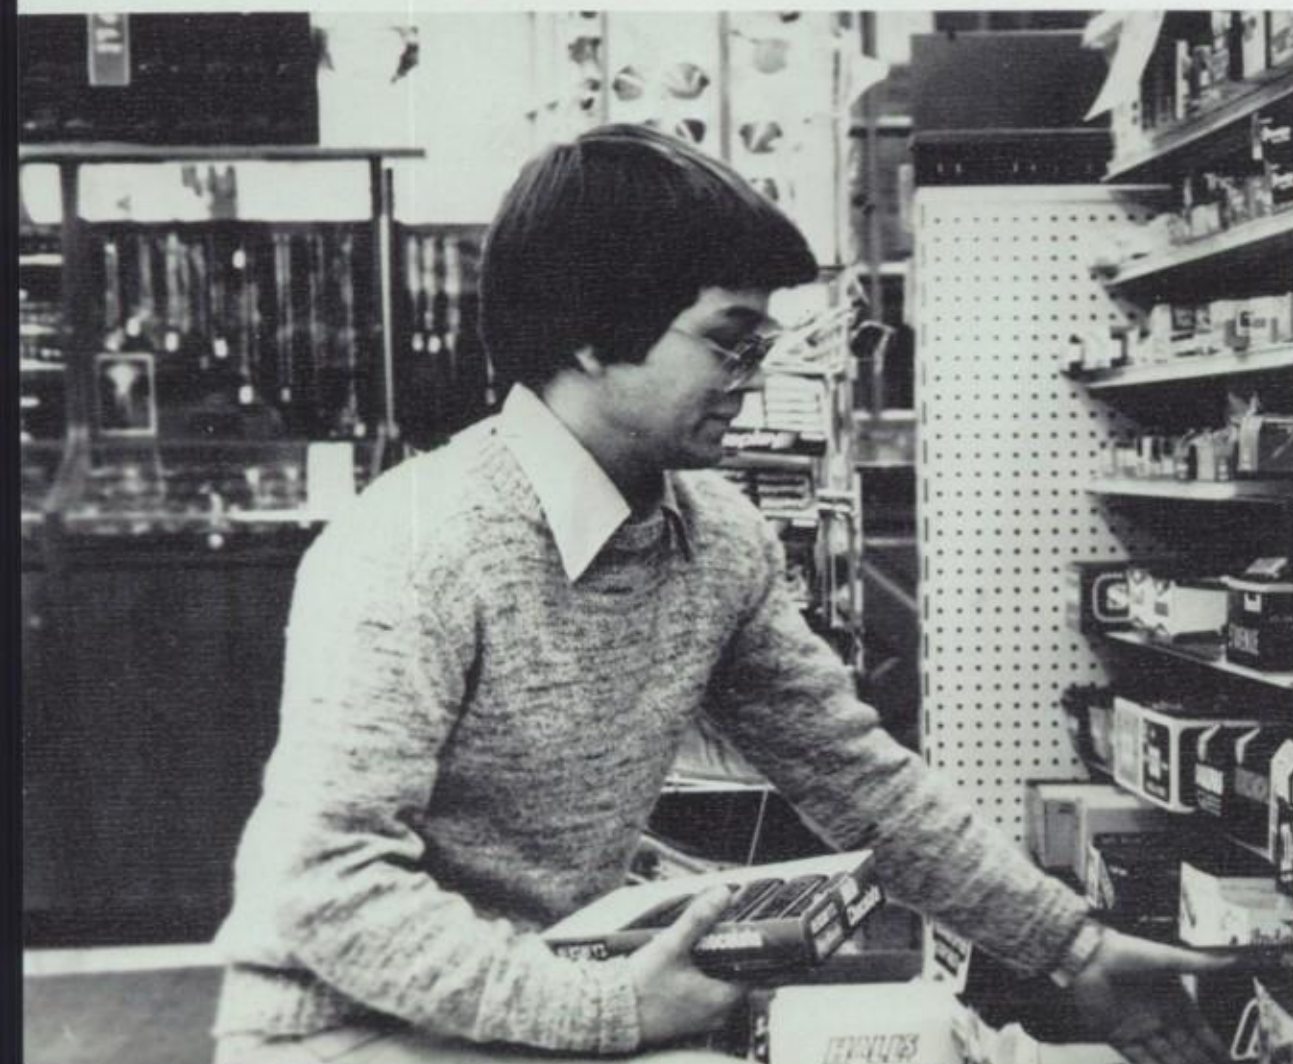

So she can fill up her gas tank every week, senior Kelly Donahue worked at the York Steak House.

Senior Lisa Engen worked 20 hours a week at Lindau's to repay her parents for her trip to Europe last summer and for her spring back trip to Florida.

Takin' it to the streets

There were many events that made the 1980-81 school year unique. However, they were not all just school-related activities. Events such as the presidential election, Abscam trials and Voyager I touched the students and affected their lives.

In January, a sampling of students was asked to comment on some of the national events. With much of the media dominated by the election, most respondents were very aware of presidential politics.

A small majority of students believed that Ronald Reagan will be a good president, better than Jimmy Carter. However, some students felt that his views are unrealistic. Others noted that he was 69 years old when inaugurated and considered that to be too old for a president.

A large percentage of students surveyed did not know much about the Voyager I space program. This was a space craft that took pictures of Saturn so scientists could learn more about it. Most students who were informed on the subject, though, said that the large amount of information obtained made it worth the money.

The Abscam trials was an event which many people seemed well-informed about. Most students didn't know if the FBI investigation and the trials were a true reflection of the nature of most American politicians, though.

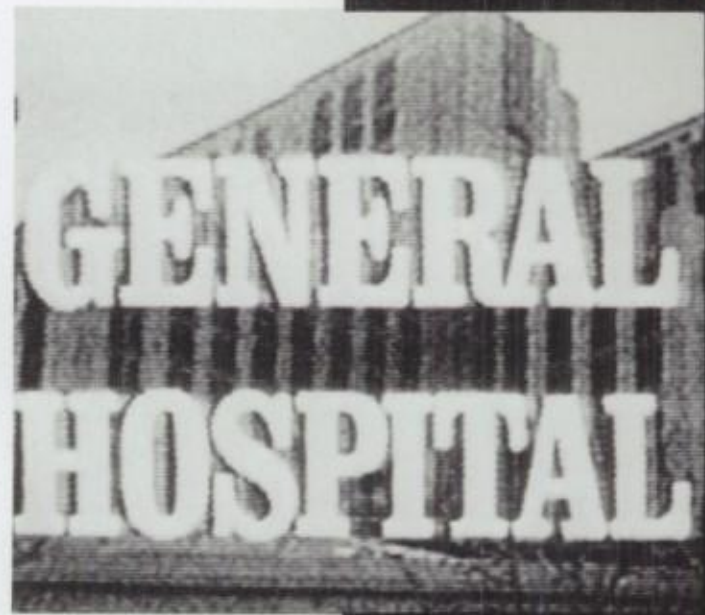

Students seemed to have more opinions about the television program Dallas. Although most students agreed that too big of a deal was made about "Who shot J.R.?", that episode of Dallas attracted a record-breaking 70 percent share of Toledo homes, according to the Nielsen ratings. Frequent comments were made that J.R. for president and J.R. beer was carrying it a bit too far.

Another major event during the year was the murder of ex-Beatle John Lennon. Students were asked whether they thought Lennon gained popularity after his death which he didn't have before he was shot. A number of students responded that he and his music was and always will be great.

A different style of music than Lennon's is punk rock. Although there seemed to be many "punk rockers" at school, most students surveyed didn't consider it music, yet others claimed that it put the listener in a good mood.

On a more serious side was the hostage-holding by the Iranians. A scant majority of students felt the United States should have gone to war with Iran over the issue. Others voiced concern that it would have only made matters worse. A much larger majority responded that they would fight if they were drafted because they owed it to their country. Some said they would fight only because they wouldn't have much of a choice.

In the survey, Mr. George Schmidt, English teacher, was selected the best teacher by the respondents.

The highlights of the year included: General Hospital, the gossip center of Port Charles, and Dallas, the two-year-old soap opera which soared in the ratings. It also discussed President Ronald Reagan, the oldest president ever elected, and John Lennon, whose first album in years was unfortunately his last.

Senior football captain Jeff Wilcox was named to the 2nd team all-GLL.

Sports

Until the final buzzer

A young child's eyes open wide as he rips the wrapping paper from his brand new toy. The toy captures his attention completely, but in less than 20 minutes, the child has left the toy behind to plant himself in front of the old reliable entertainer — the television.

This is exactly the case with students and high school sports. While many students made appearances at various games, there was generally a limited number who remained until the final buzzer. This group of Wildcat fans could usually be counted on at football, hockey, baseball and both guys and girls basketball.

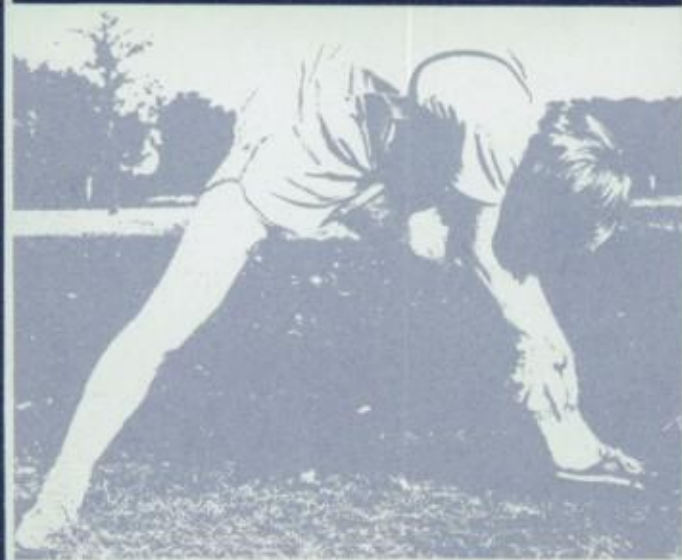

Those students who came to the games but became bored with a lopsided score or a slow game took off to find a more exciting way to spend their evening. A party, pizza or a trip to the store for a six usually took the place of the final minutes of the game.

According to a JV basketball player, seeing their "fans" leave a game did not give the team much incentive to continue. It also bothered the cheerleaders.

"We got mad because the guys need our support when they're winning or losing," varsity cheerleader Kathy Frain said.

Another cheerleader felt losing fans half way through a game could not have left a very good impression on the opposing team.

At the early fall track meets, approximately 15 minutes were spent warming up. Senior Barry Ward stretches before the home meet with Fostoria.

The hockey team warms up in the newly restored Tam O'Shanter before a game with Centerville. The team won by a score of 3-1.

A trend for the future

This year the Wildcat football team had the best record in the school's history, ending with a 7-2-1 mark.

According to Coach Craig Schaefer, "The team had a great season because they finally realized, that in order to win, they must perform as a team, not only rely on a few key players."

The season began Aug. 29 with a tough game against cross-town rival Southview. "Last year the kids looked forward to that game all season and forgot about the other games," Coach Rick Spiess said. "This year we got the game over early, and then worked on a winning season." The Cats beat Southview 13-6.

The second game, took Northview to Anthony Wayne for a close game. But the Cats again came out on top 25-15.

The Wildcats traveled to Perrysburg Sept. 12 to meet the defending NLL-champs and lost 14-7. "We just made too many mistakes, against a really good football team," Coach Schaefer said.

With a record of 2-1, the Cats hosted the Rogers Rams Sept. 19 for the Shoe trophy. This year Northview received the Shoe with a 14-12 win over the Rams.

On Sept. 26, Northview hosted Bedford. The Mules came into the game with a 3-0 record, but left with a 3-1 mark and a 34-14 beating. Perry Overholser had a great game with 205 yards and two touchdowns.

The next week Northview travelled to Napoleon to try to boost their record to 5-1. At the end of the first half, Northview was down 22-15. But, in the second half, the Wildcat offense came alive to score three touchdowns giving them a 36-22 victory and a big GLL win.

The stage was set for Northview and Clay in the Homecoming game. Neither team, however, was able to break a 7-7 tie before the final gun.

In the most important game of the season, the Cats traveled to Fostoria, to meet the state-ranked Redmen. Northview was ahead 7-6 with 46 seconds left in the game, but Fostoria's Joe Johnson carried the ball four yards for the winning score in the 14-7 loss which knocked the Cats out of contention for the GLL championship.

Northview got back on the winning track the next week against Start. The team shut out the Spartans 24-0. Overholser, again led the offensive attack with 141 yards and two touchdowns.

The Wildcats finished the season by rolling over DeVilbiss 42-0 in a steady rain. Overholser led the offense again with 176 yards and two touchdowns.

Senior co-captain Jeff Wilcox summed up the season saying, "The team had a positive attitude. That attitude will be here for awhile. We are winners."

"Another One Bites the Dust." This was the Wildcat theme song that encouraged the team to a 7-2-1 season.

The shoe – not just a trophy

The crowd buzzes with anticipation; the team prepares to take the field. The cry goes up from the fans — “We want the Shoe!” The Shoe? What Shoe? What makes this game so special to all?

The game against Rogers is paramount in the hearts and minds of the coaches, players and fans because of one thing . . . THE SHOE!

Sylvania first faced Rogers during the 1950s, but when Rogers joined the City League in the early 1960s a new dimension was added to the game as Sylvania felt that it had to prove its superiority over its big-city foe. Thad Averill, then a teacher at Sylvania, thought that there was a need for a trophy of some sort to be taken home by the winning team. Mr. Jim Glase, Northview's current athletic director, found an old football shoe, which he decided to have bronzed, and the Shoe was born.

Sylvania came away victorious in that first Shoe game and the outcome was no different this year. Northview claimed the Shoe with a 14-12 knock-out of highly regarded Rogers High. The win proved to all that the early season success of the Wildcats was not a fluke.

Senior tailback Perry Overholser scored on touchdown runs of 5 and 25 yards to lead the Wildcats to a come-from-behind victory. A drive by Rogers late in the game came to a screeching halt on an interception by Chris Schroom to preserve the win for Northview.

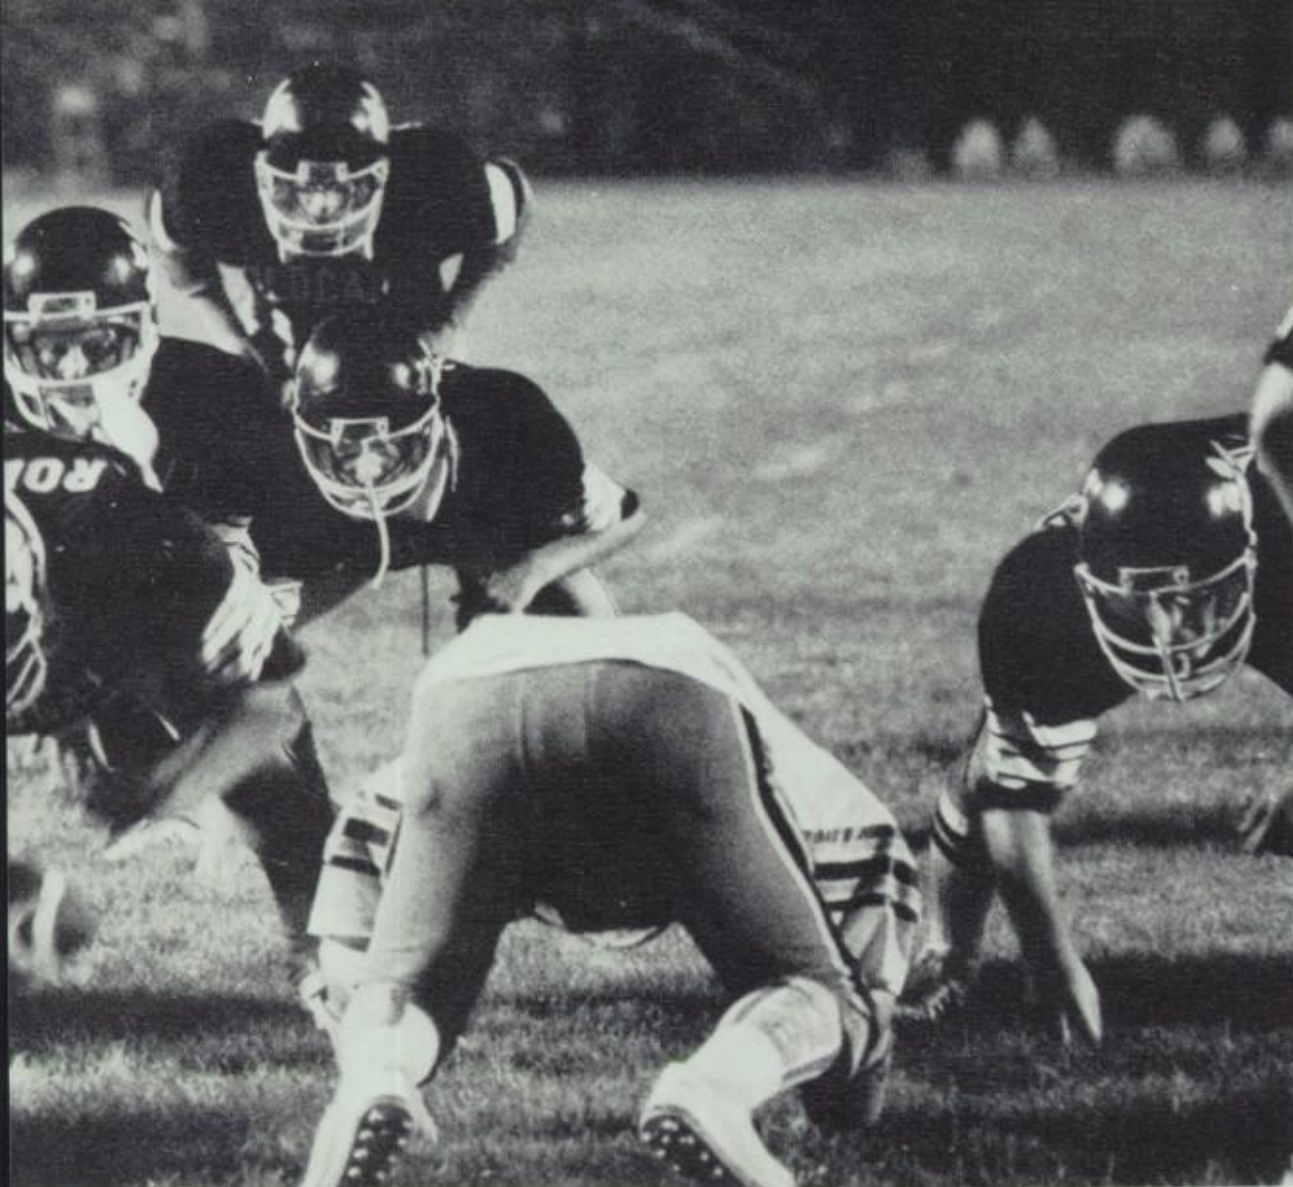

Winning the Shoe was an important victory in what was to become the winningest season ever for a Northview football team.

Smashing through the hoop before the Rogers game, Mark Thomas leads the Wildcats to their second Shoe victory in three years.

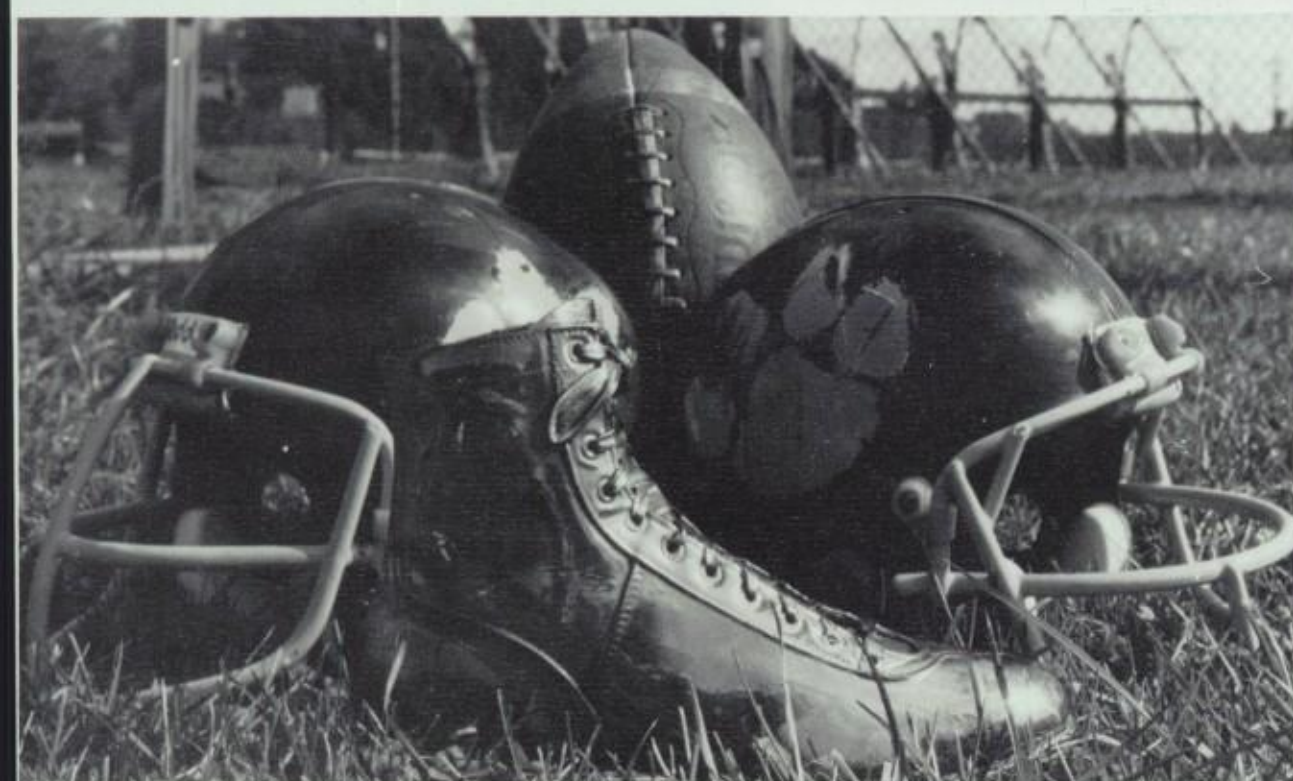

Fullback Donnie Smith cuts up field en route to a game total of 67 yards rushing.

Quarterback Dan Pierce, who completed 5 of 9 passes for 67 yards in the game, takes the snap from center Robbie Roberts.

After a controversial call, the referee's decision is explained to a questioning Coach Rick Spiess by referee Charles Rock.

The Shoe, which is older than most Northview students, will go back into the display case until next year's game.

On third and long the Rogers' quarterback is nailed to the ground by one of Northview's defensive linemen. The Wildcat front four put pressure on the opposition quarterbacks all season long as well as doing a fine job stopping the run.

A famed dame

One-half ton of iron, an array of nuts and bolts, and springs and pads. All describe a dreaded device otherwise known as the notorious Wildcat Bertha.

Bertha is the football team's seven-man sled. She was purchased in 1973 by Northview's Athletic Director Jim Glase for approximately $800.

The Wildcat gridders had no trouble in selecting a nickname for this massive structure. Today one can see Bertha's name inscribed on each of her seven springs.

The team uses Bertha on their Tuesday and Wednesday practices, otherwise known as "contact days." Seven players line up opposite one of her pads as they would against a seven-man line-up. At the sound of a whistle, the players attempt to "put Bertha in her place" by hitting her and moving her anywhere from 10 to 20 yards.

All of this, along with an array of barbells and other standard progressive weight equipment and the new tire drill, assist the football team in their pre-season conditioning as well as in their daily workouts.

Here she is. A string of gutsy Wildcat gridders give Bertha a taste of her own medicine.

On the way up

Opening the season on a good note, the freshman football team shut out Fassett 12-0. This game highlighted their season along with outstanding performances of several team members.

Quarterback John Cavanaugh led the offense, with Ken Kuchcinski as leading scorer and rusher, along with Ed Wagner, the receiver. According to Coach Kevin Mitchell, some of the better defensive players were Steve Wagner, Tom Kennedy and Bob O'Neal.

Representing the team throughout the entire season was the squad of eight freshman cheerleaders. Beginning the school year early, the girls spent the last two weeks of summer making up cheers and chants and learning the routines from the varsity cheerleaders. Along with the practices the girls supported the team by baking cookies, making locker posters and painting signs.

Wear it; it's a demerit

No jewelry, no gum and no driving to away games. Those were only a few of the rules in the new demerit system established for cheerleaders this year. The demerit system, modified from one at Southview, was designed to help keep the squads running smoothly with strict and disciplined action.

Each infraction of a rule equaled a certain number of points or demerits which would accumulate until ten were earned, which then resulted in the cheerleader's suspension from a game or pep assembly. Missing a single practice was one of the more stringent rules. For that, a cheerleader would be prohibited from participation in the upcoming game.

"Through the use of demerits, cheerleaders realized that there was more involved to cheerleading than just wearing a uniform," explained adviser Miss Cindy Seel.

For an unexpected experience, beyond just wearing the uniform and practicing cheers, the varsity cheerleaders were chosen to appear on the local television show P.M. Magazine as part of a five-minute segment on cheerleading. All of this tied in with the show's main feature of a cheerleading camp which took place in Maryland during the summer.

Filmed in the Northview gym, the varsity squad performed chants, cheers and mounts along with teaching the host of the show, Tom Marshall, the "Funky Chicken."

"It was exciting (appearing on the show), even though we were nervous," said junior Ginny Sadd. "But it was fun to see ourselves on television."

Girls win GLL

For the second year in a row, singles players Amy Dedricks and Lorie Keating qualified for the state tournament in doubles. They advanced to the quarter-final round before losing to the eventual finalists from Cincinnati Princeton.

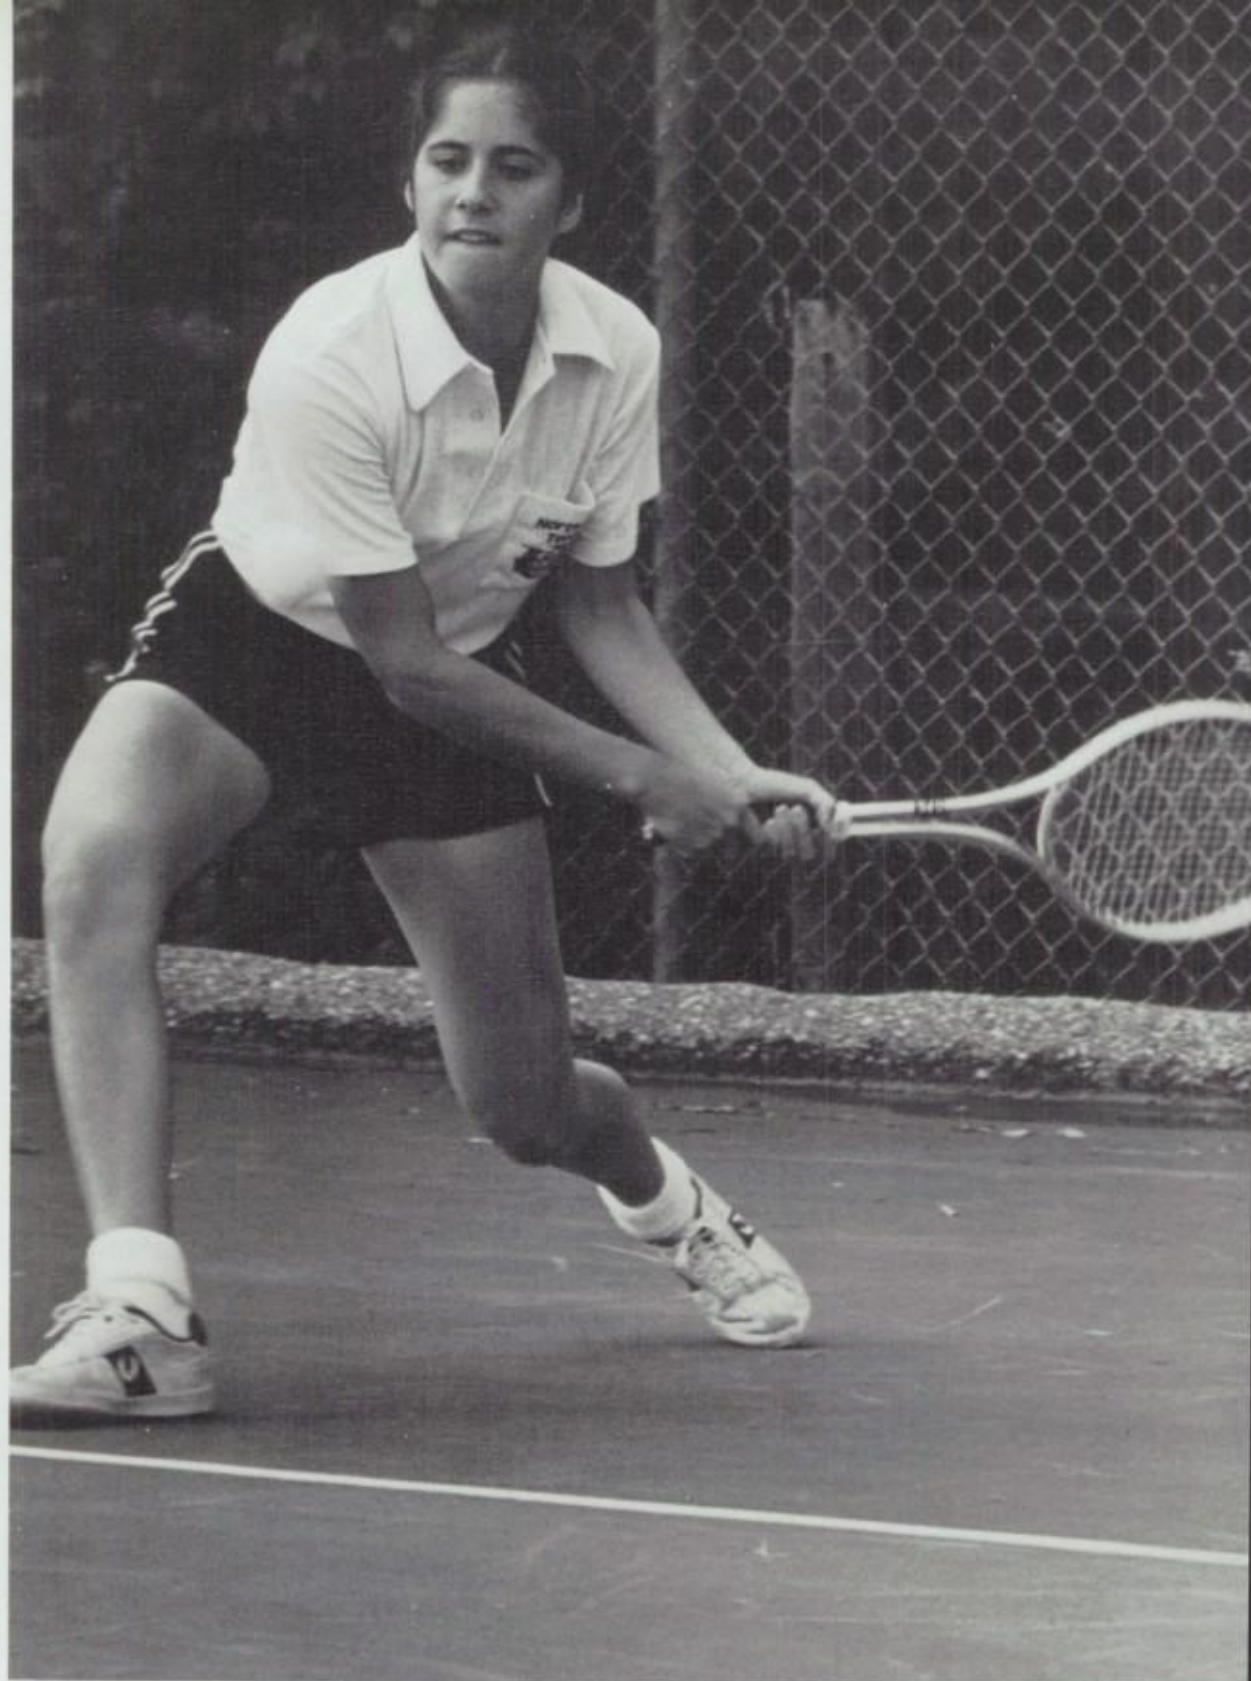

As a team, the girls posted a 19-1 record and a first place finish in the GLL. Much of their success came from second singles player Lorie Keating who remained undefeated throughout the whole season.

Playing at first singles, Amy Dedricks completed the season with a record of 16-3. Dedricks and Keating weren't the only bright spots during the season. Playing at third singles, freshman Julie Campbell finished with a 15-5 record and was a GLL runner-up.

The varsity team not only relied on these three talented singles players, but also on its first and second doubles teams of Lisa Knight and Jennifer Ide, Ruthanne Shaw and Sue Schlenker. Both completed their seasons with 15-2 and 11-6, respectively.

A big help to the team this year was the resurfacing of Northview's tennis courts. According to Diane Youssef, "The new courts improved play considerably." It also allowed the girls to play their home matches at Northview rather than at Tam O'Shanter, where they had played in the past.

According to Amy Dedricks, "This really encouraged us to go out and win." And, that's exactly what they did.

Not up to par

The golf team finished their dual meet season with a fourth in the GLL. This is the second consecutive season that the linksman finished fourth in the league. Coach Bob Berning said, "This year's team was not as successful as I hoped it would be."

For the past decade the team has finished first or second in the league, with the exception of the last two seasons. According to senior Corky Rocco, "The varsity team really suffered a let-down this year due to the lack of experienced replacements for the lost seniors."

Despite the team's overall outcome, seniors Corky Rocco, Jim Lange and Bill Maxwell all had an exceptional year according to Coach Berning.

Senior Bill Maxwell follows through on a putt in Northview's win against Bedford. Bill shot an average 78.3 this year.

New state law splits harriers

In accordance with a regulation established by the Ohio Athletic Association, the Northview cross country team was split into separate boys' and girls' teams.

The change left much of the old format in place, while changing certain other aspects of the sport. Both teams still practiced together and traveled to many of the same meets together, but the times of the boy runners and girl runners were logged separately.

One reason for the change was to accommodate the private and parochial schools in Ohio. These schools often have only boys or girls enrolled and couldn't compete under the old system.

The nature of cross country — being a team sport with individual times — makes team depth important. According to Caren Goldberg, "Everybody's time counts because even if somebody doesn't place, they drive the others to run harder."

Stretching exercises are necessary to prevent injuries that can occur when running in cold weather. Junior Stu Ogletree assists junior Jeff Wood in his preparations for a late afternoon practice.

Dressed to kill

The girls' volleyball team was back in black for the fall season with all-new, gold and black striped uniforms. Black — the symbol of death, a sign of strength and power, but, the girls managed just one win this year.

The old uniforms were finally replaced after years of use in an effort by the athletic boosters to keep the equipment of all sports at a high level of quality. "We were all very happy to get these uniforms, but they weren't very comfortable," Kim Simon said.

The volleyball team also obtained a new coach this year, Coach Jeff Ustick, who had previous experience coaching boys' basketball teams. Ustick, new to the Northview faculty, teaches sociology and geography.

Because of a school policy requiring teachers at Northview to have the first crack at coaching jobs at the school, Mr. Ustick got the nod over last year's coach, Mr. Tom Scheller.

Getting thin to win

It's just minutes before weigh-in time at the biggest match of the season. John Q. Wrestler is still trying to shed that final pound so that he can drop to a lower weight class. He has gone without food for three days, he has spent hours in the sauna, he has run 87 miles around the gym in the last two days and now at last he is ready to wrestle. Or is he?

While it is true that John Q. has the advantage of being at the upper end of his new weight class, he is pinned immediately because every ounce of energy has been sapped from his body. Such a rapid weight loss causes John Q. to become ill he lapses into a coma and dies.

The above situation, while quite fictitious and certainly exaggerated, can be useful in making a point. According to senior Thad O'Brien, if the coach decides a player must drop a weight class, he usually receives a few days notice. "We try to keep our weight steady throughout the season," he added.

when necessary. Weight conditioning to add strength without adding excessive bulk is another way to increase his advantage over an opponent without jumping a weight class. The classes were created as a means of equalizing competition, but many of the by-products concerning health were unforeseen.

The wrestlers finished fourth in the GLL tournament with 90 points. They were just 7 points out of second place as Bedford continued their dominance of the league placing 10 of 12. Placing for Northview were John Dondero and Mike Knopp.

The wrestlerettes were an important part of the wrestling team. According to senior Joe Belinski, they did many things to build enthusiasm and support.

Among the tasks performed this year were keeping score, filling water bottles and cheering on the players. Another job of the wrestlerettes was passing out oranges to wrestlers after each match to help them rebuild their strength for another match.

Besides helping during the matches, the wrestlerettes raised money for the team by selling candy bars and M&M's. The money was used for equipment, uniforms and the oranges.

To each, his own

The Olympics comes once every four years and with it comes a handful of fresh and more difficult routines for the Northview gymnasts.

According to Northview's gymnastics captain, junior Ginny Sadd, "This year's routines are far more difficult than past routines. A routine that was considered to be easy, is now considered to be difficult."

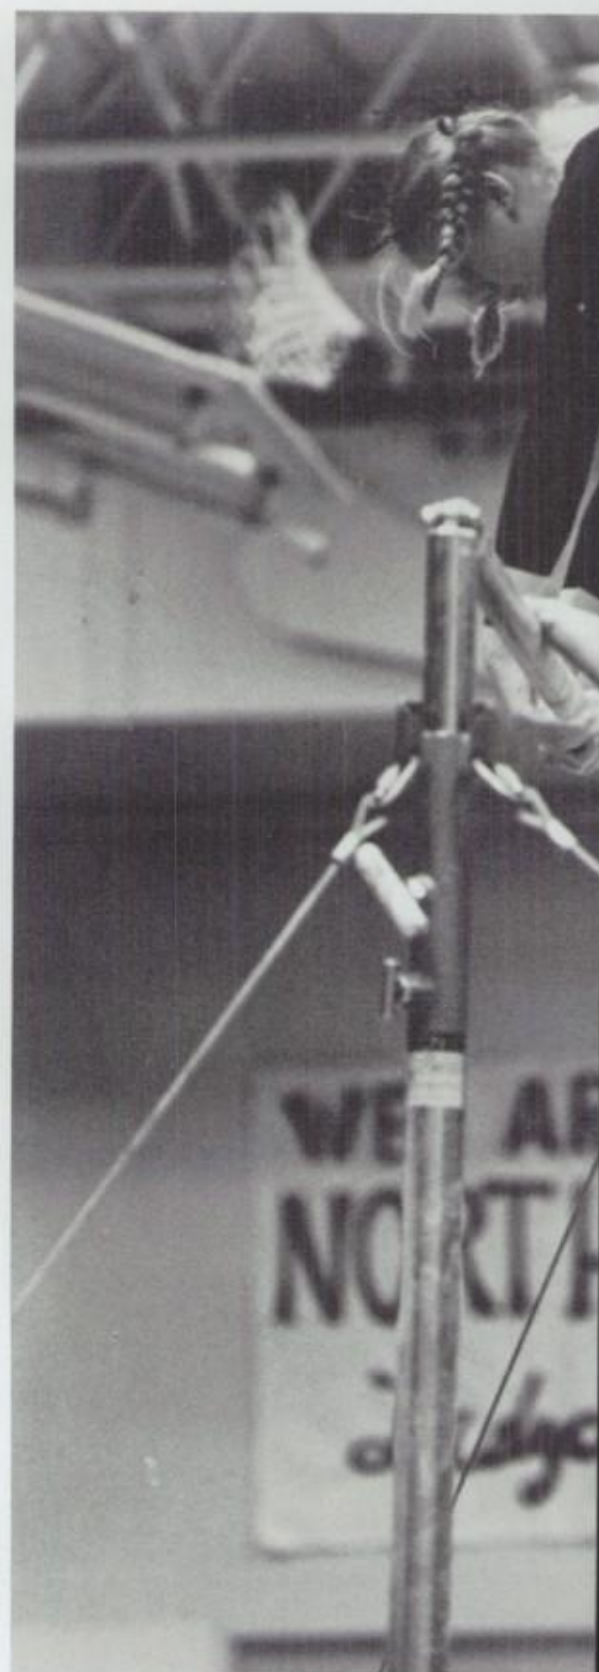

Gymnastics is a fairly individualized sport. Two or three times a week, the team gathers in the Burnham Building gym for a practice session. Splitting up into several groups is often what happens at a practice.

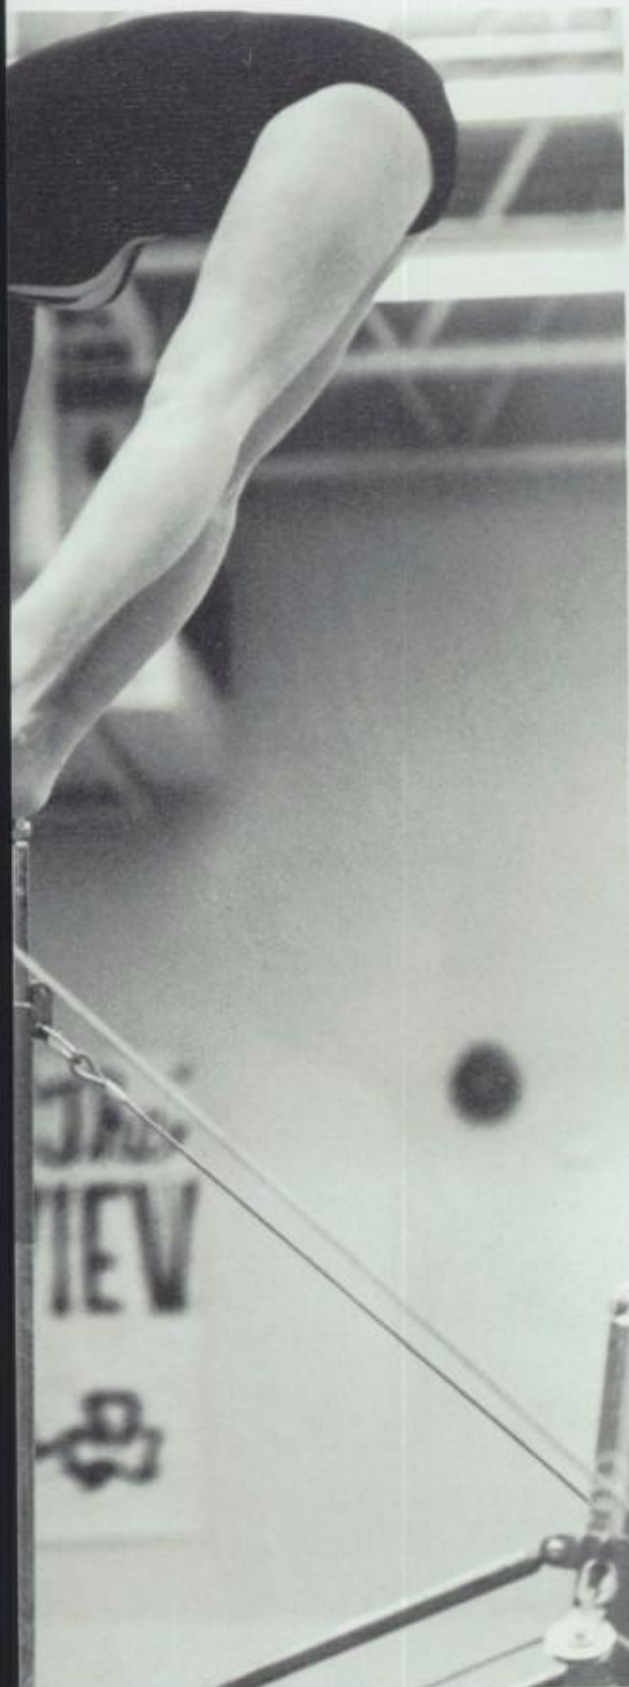

"There isn't too much practicing as a team that goes on at a practice session, except when we hold an intrasquad competition to determine who is best suited to participate in a meet," junior Laura Guinessey said. "It's kind of like each gymnast to themselves."

Northview's gymnastics program was also provided with a new coach this year, Ms. Peggy Warner. She is a physical education teacher at Whiteford and Stranahan Elementary Schools. The girls gymnastics team finished with a record of 3-4.

Foul play on & off the court

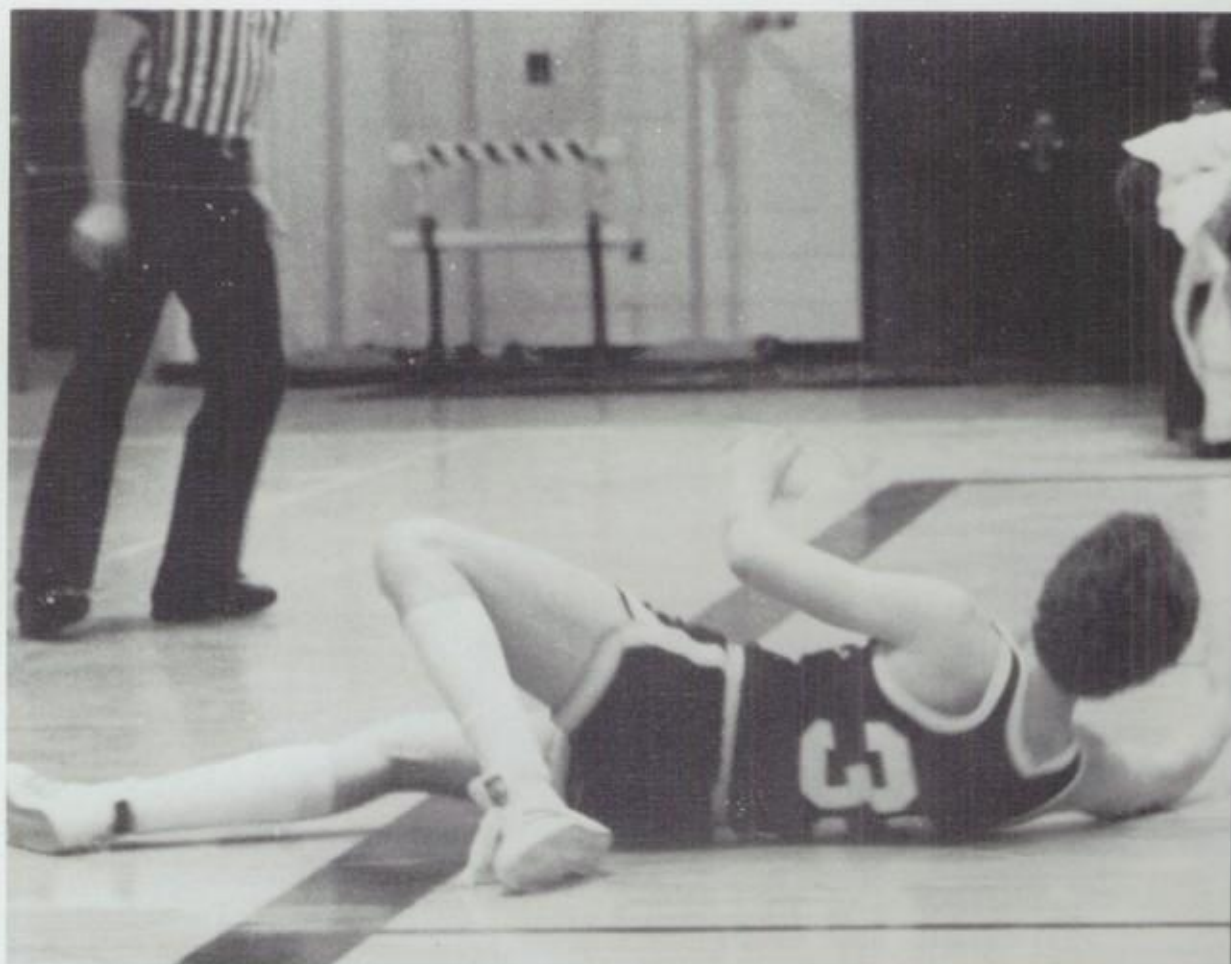

Spies are roaming the halls; the school has been placed under martial law. Rules have been posted to keep a certain segment of the populous under control and thinking of only one goal at all times. The rules include "no hand holding" and "no unnecessary physical contact." The goal is winning basketball games. The law has been laid down by Coach Jeff Seemann.

Although there were no spies at Northview, the restrictions on the actions of the varsity basketball players were real. According to forward Mill Banker, the coach did allow couples to walk next to each other in the halls and even talk to each other under some circumstances. However, the display of emotions or physical affection while in school was strictly taboo.

Banker's girlfriend Stephanie Giha was particularly upset by the coach's interference. "It really upsets me that he'd try something like this," she said. However, Mill was not perturbed by the situation, saying, "I don't even care because there is no way he can check on us."

Other team members, who preferred to remain anonymous, minded the action, and said the coach should stick to the basketball playing end of their lives and leave their off-court lives to themselves.

The players did manage to make the transition from hand holding to ball handling and finish with a winning record. The Cats, 11-9 overall, finished second in the GLL with a 6-3 record, trailing only undefeated Napoleon, ranked #3 in the state in Class AA.

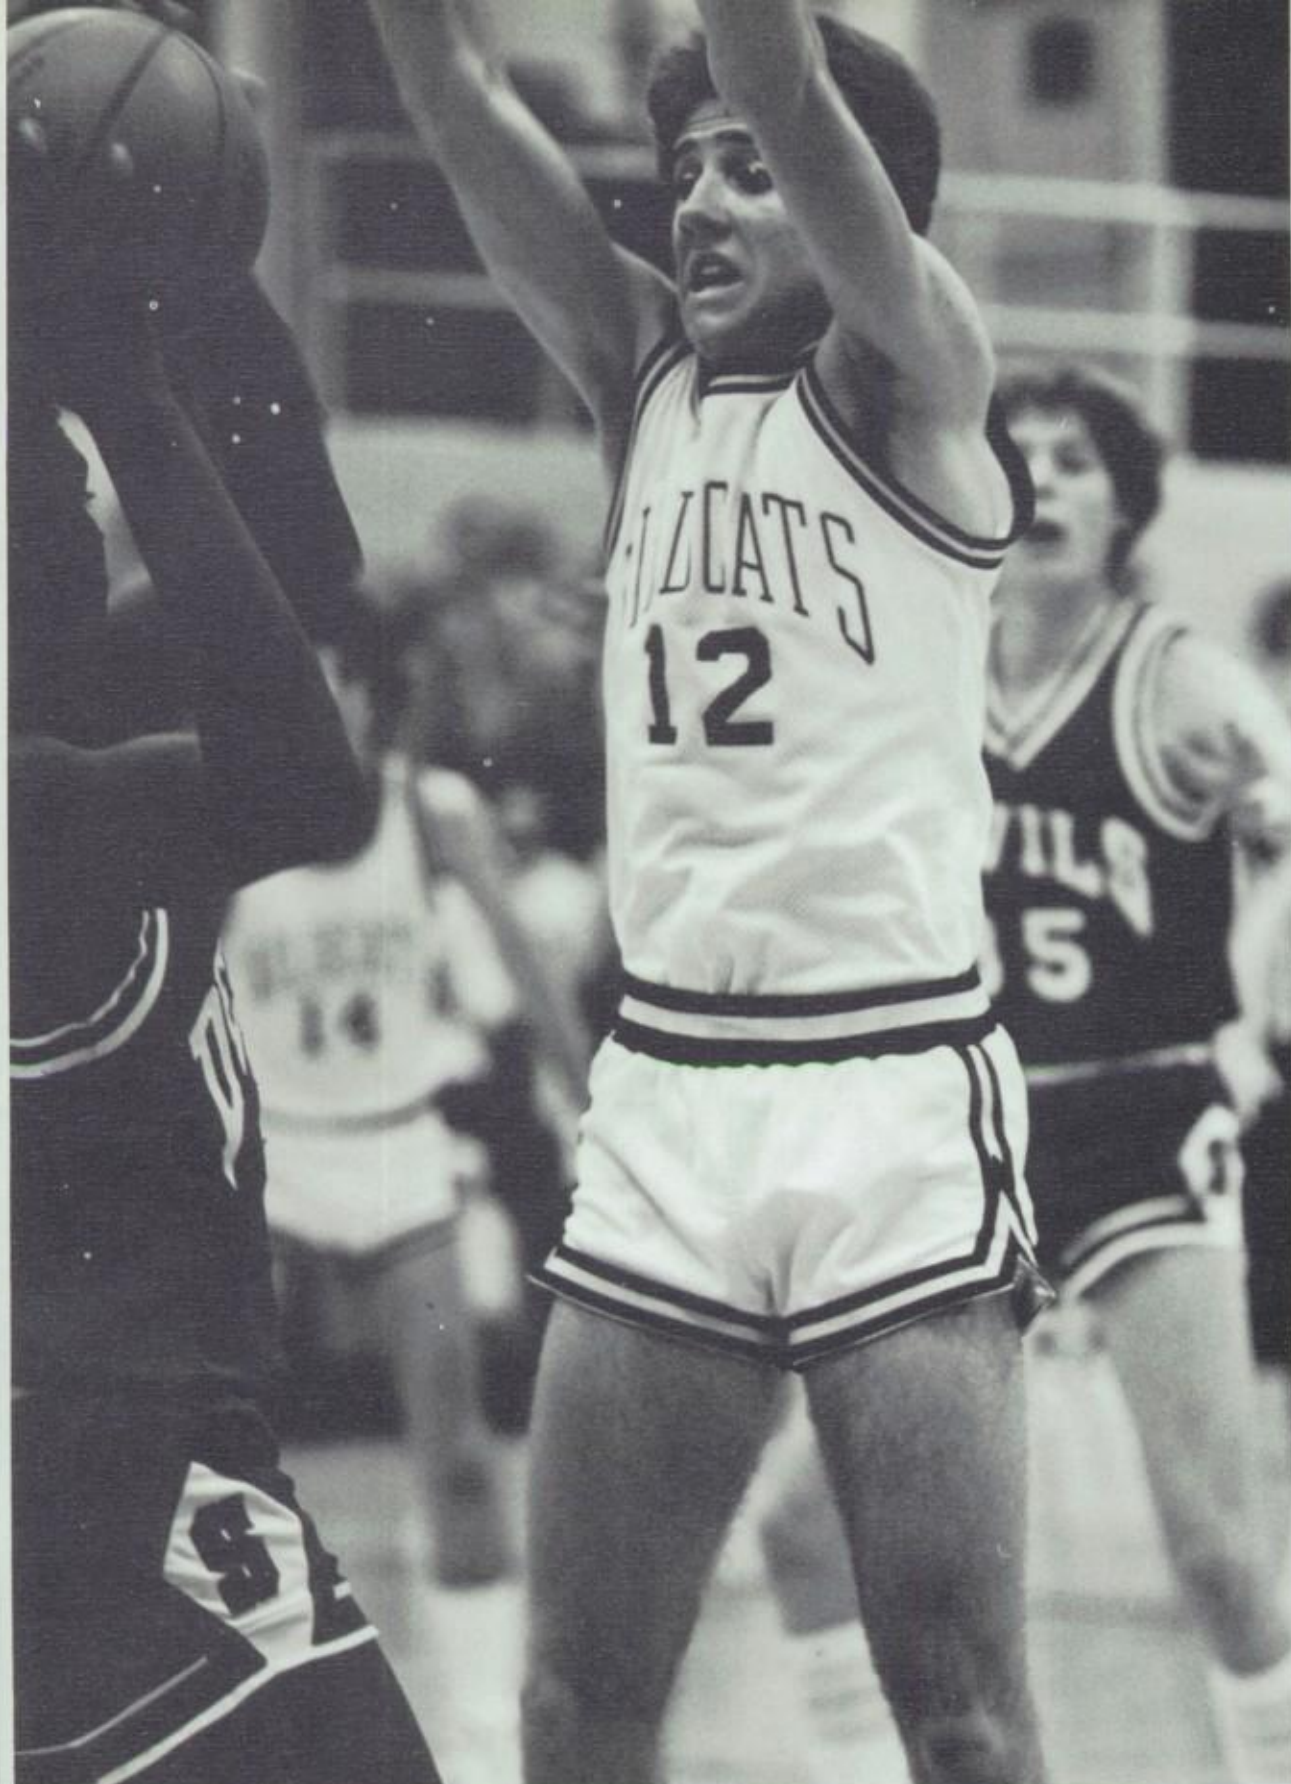

Scoring on a 20 foot jumpshot is senior guard Pete Miller.

Holiday tournament

This past year the varsity basketball team was invited to participate in the second annual Northwestern Ohio Prep Classic in the University of Toledo's Centennial Hall. The quality of the teams invited to the Dec. 21 & 27 tournament was evidenced by their combined 13-2 record.

However, the turn-out for the games was far less than last year because, in searching for the very best teams available, schools from many miles from Toledo were invited, bringing less fan support than the local teams. Another factor in the low attendance was that some games were played as early as 10 o'clock on Saturday and Sunday mornings. Less than 2,000 of the close to 10,000 seats were filled for Northview's games.

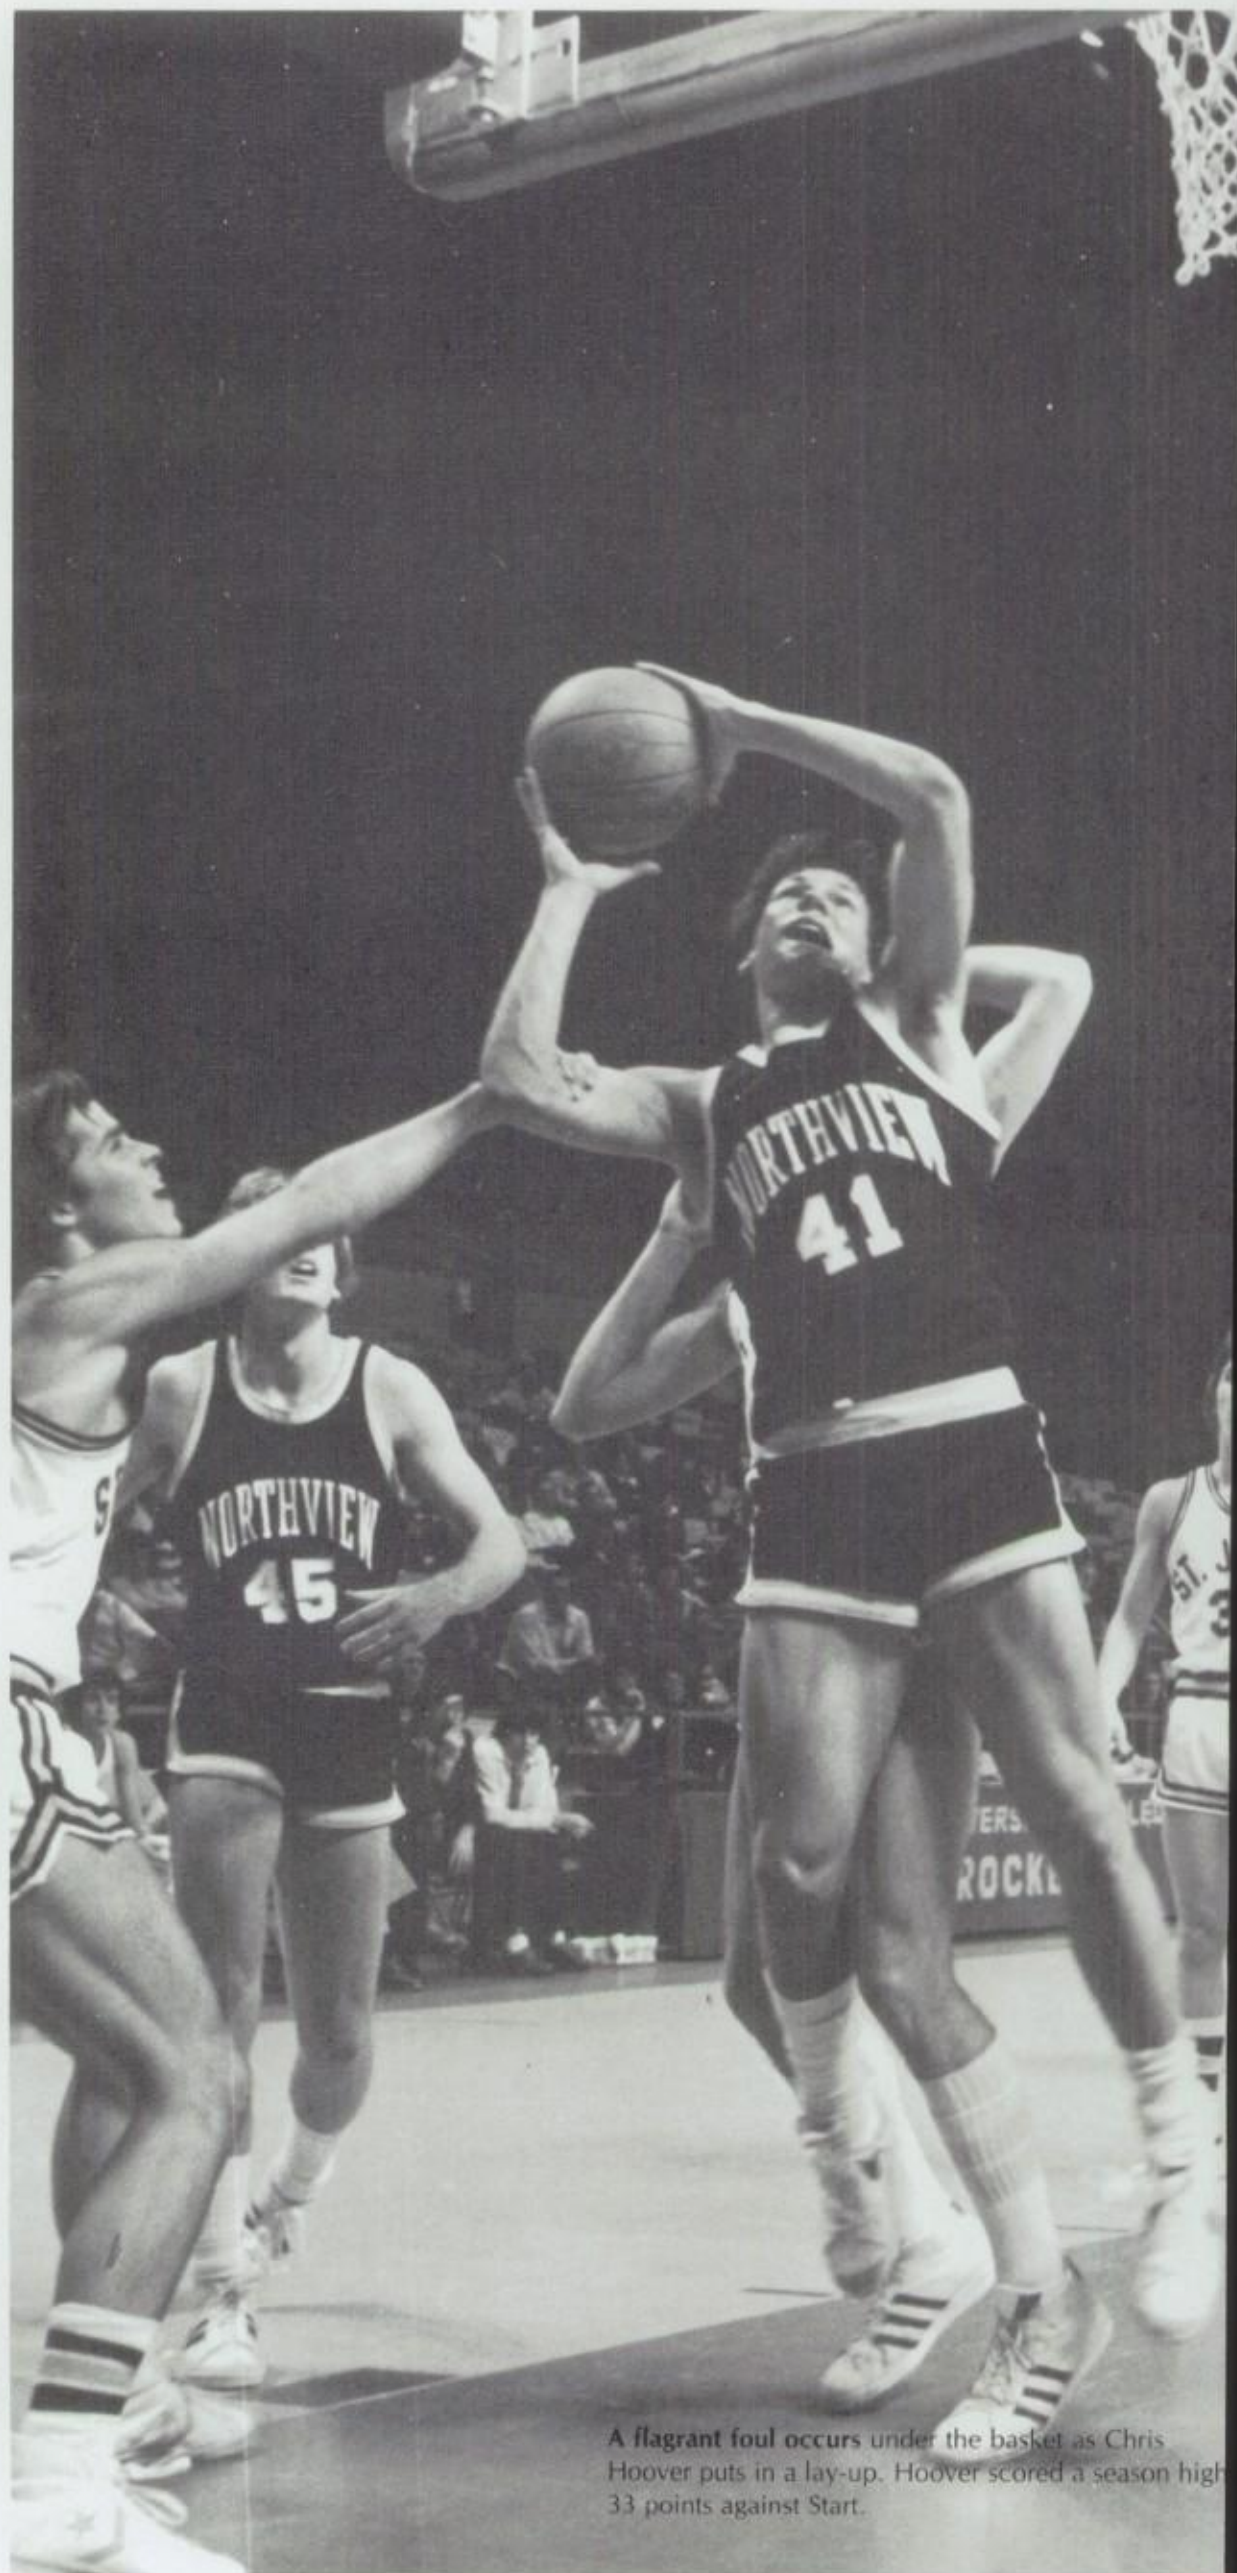

Senior center Jim Lange noted that the college court was longer than a high school court, saying, "That could have messed up our transition game, but it didn't bother us."

The Cats wound up losing their opener to St. Johns, 55-48, and bowing to Scott, 60-54, in the consolation round the following weekend.

Bob Jacobs and Chris Hoover tossed in 12 points each from the two forward positions against St. Johns to pace the Northview attack. In the Scott game, the Cats grabbed a 39-34 lead after three quarters of play before succumbing to Scott's full-court press in the final quarter. Lange paced the team with 20 points, with Hoover adding 20.

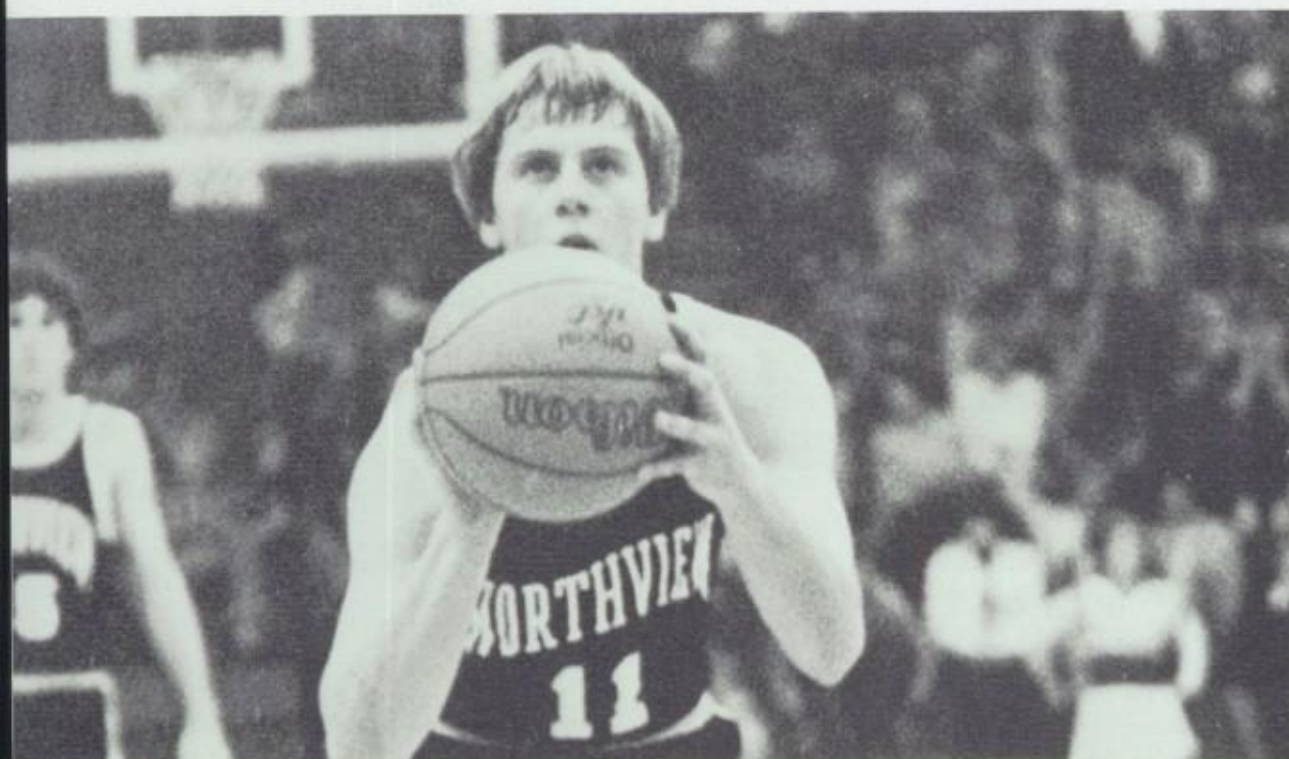

Coach Jeff Seemann explains his new defensive strategy to the players during a Wildcat time out. Seemann is the youngest coach in the GLL and is in his second year of coaching the varsity.

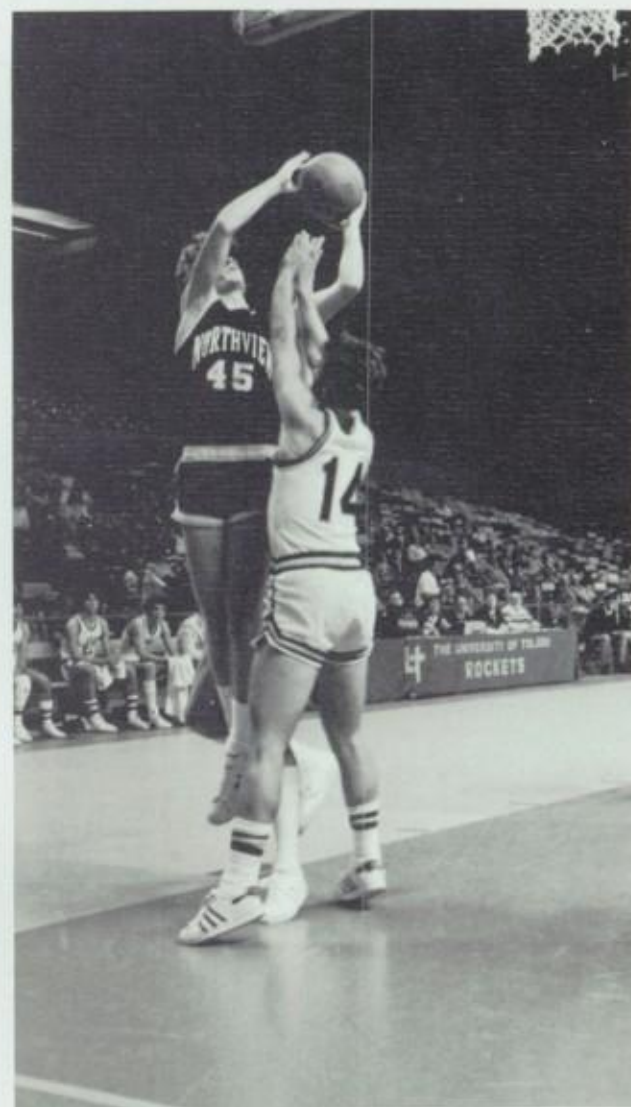

A flagrant foul occurs under the basket as Chris Hoover puts in a lay-up. Hoover scored a season high 33 points against Start.

The Cats were poised for the performance as the suspense and excitement grew. The show was about to begin.

Yes, a basketball game is a little like a three-ring circus.

As the fans filed into the gym, the players anxiously warmed-up while the pep band's rendition of "The Stripper" echoed off the walls. Everything builds toward the tip-off and the action on the court for the next hour and a half.

Like going to the circus, the anticipation and excitement of the game is very real. Emotions rise and fall as the athletes strive to gain an upperhand. When the game is over and everything has ended, the fans exit. The lights dim and only the mess is left to be cleaned.

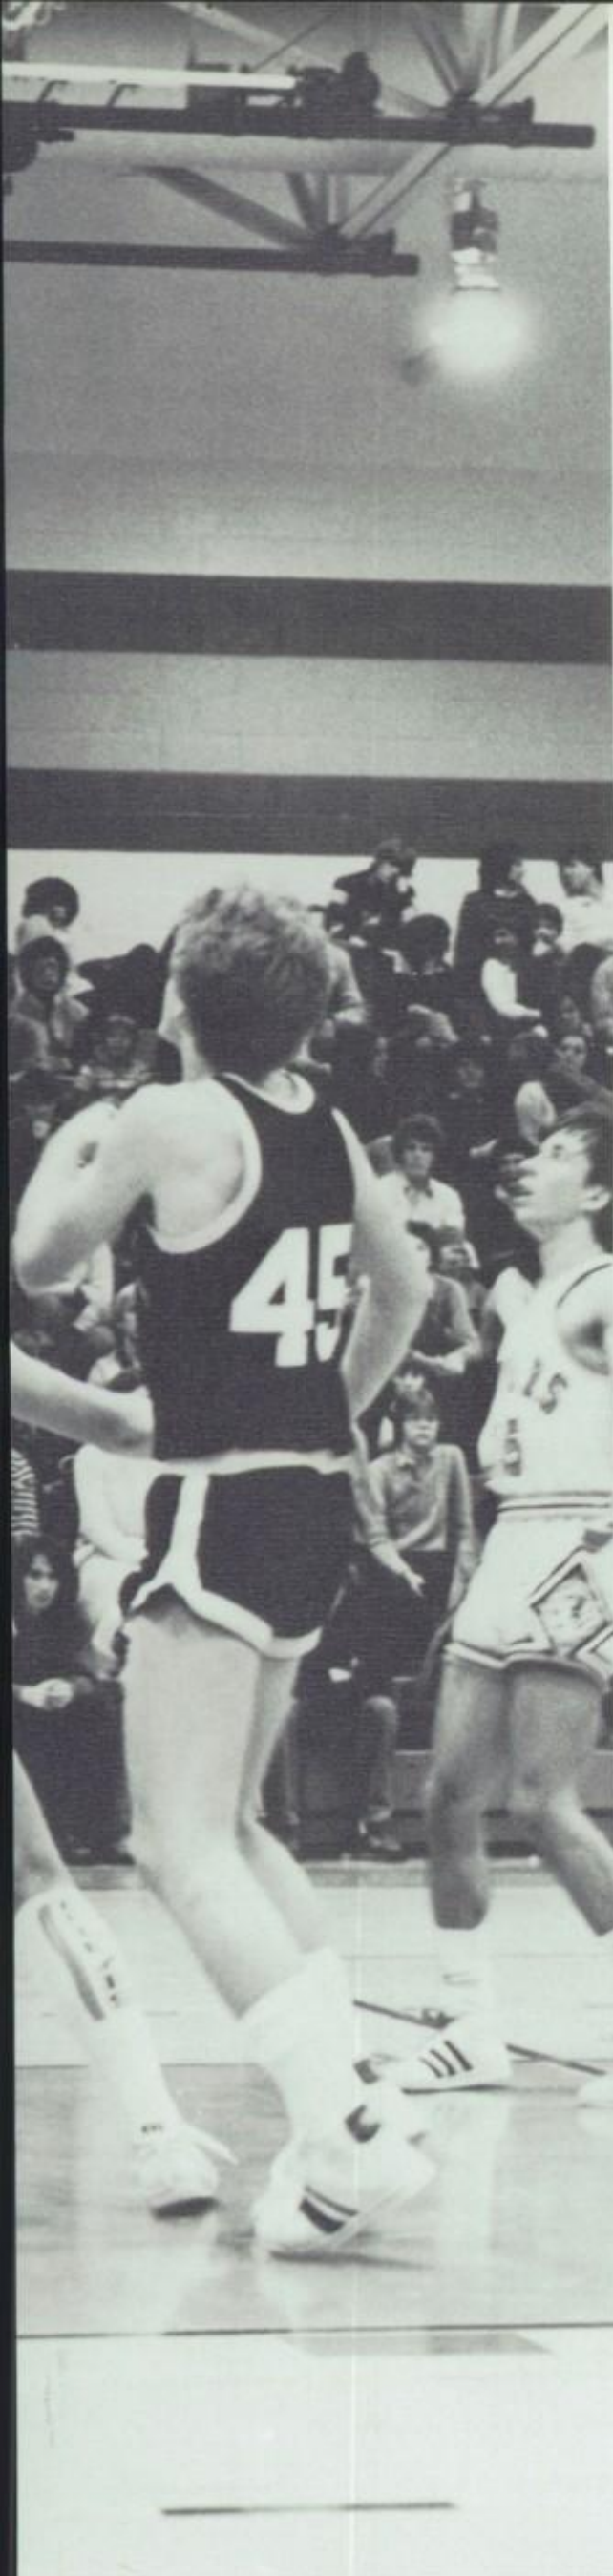

And later, just as the youngster vaguely remembers the clowns and elephants at the circus, all that is left are fading memories.

The rookies

The JV and freshman boys basketball teams ended their seasons with records of 5-13 and 2-14. "Even though neither team had an excellent season, the kids worked really hard and I'm proud of them," JV coach Allen Burns said.

The boys JV basketball team was led by Coach Burns. The team was made up of 13 sophomores and 4 juniors, although juniors Jim Glover and Dale Emch moved down from the varsity squad to play a few JV games.

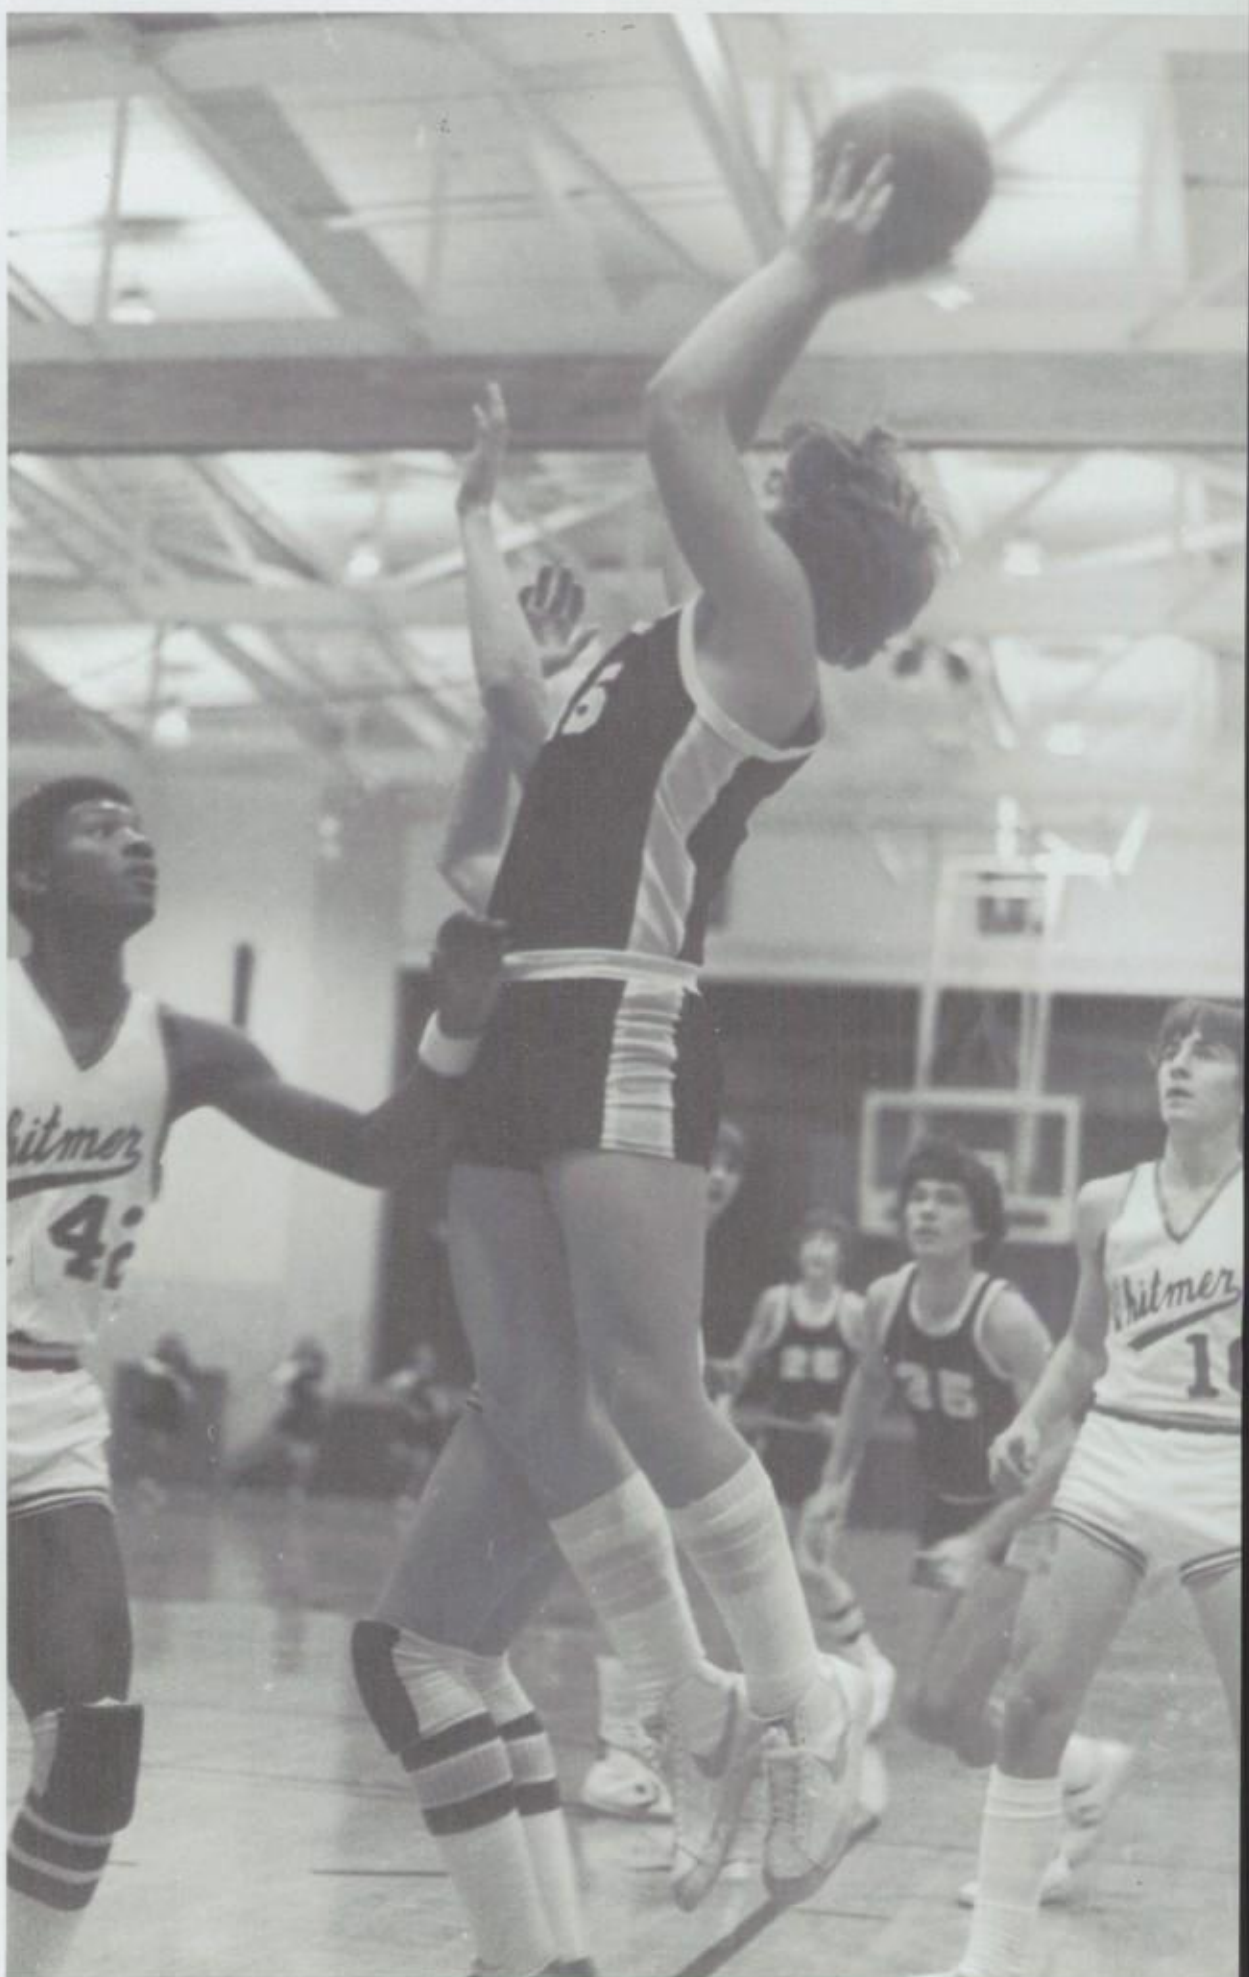

According to Mike Schultz, the most exciting game of the season was the Cardinal Stritch game. With a few ticks left on the clock, sophomore Ben James hit an 18-foot jump shot giving the Cats a 37-36 win.

The freshman basketball team was led by Coach Mike O'Reilly. Mr. O'Reilly, a gym teacher at Maplewood, coached for the first time at Northview this year. "Coaching the freshmen was a challenge because they learned different skills at different schools. I had to find a way to combine us into one team," Coach O'Reilly explained. "It took the team awhile to get used to working together, but eventually they improved greatly."

Hockey's a costly sport

Five seniors, six juniors and five sophomores made up the varsity hockey team. Coached by Mr. Jim Cooper, the team completed their season with a 23-5 record. "With twelve returning lettermen, our team was very experienced," said Coach Cooper.

This experience helped the team win the Tim Weisenberg Memorial Tournament at Miami University. Four teams were defeated to capture the championship. "We were really excited to win such a big tournament," said junior Tim Suter. "It really got our season rolling."

The team was also victorious in their own Holiday Tournament at Tam O'Shanter. Northview won with a record of 3-1, being defeated only by Giha's, but later avenged that defeat in the championship by a score of 6-0.

In order to realize such victories many sacrifices, both physical and financial, were involved. While the boosters furnished the team's pants, jerseys, helmets and gloves, the players had to purchase their own sticks and skates. Team members also spent an average of $300 a year for ice time. In an attempt to save on expensive afternoon ice time, the team practiced from 5:30 to 6:45 a.m. on Wednesdays and Fridays.

These practices, plus many others, helped to create a winning team. "The desire was there, and we really pulled together to form one of the best teams in Northview's history," said assistant co-captain Bob Napierala.

Juniors Rocky Muzsynski and Ted Warrington, two of the 12 returning lettermen, have done a great job of defending the goal.

One of the leading scorers for Northview, assistant captain Bob Napierala has helped to lead the team on and off the ice.

Junior Tim Suter (#16), playing for his third year on the varsity team, has also led in scoring for the icemen.

Sylvania's folly

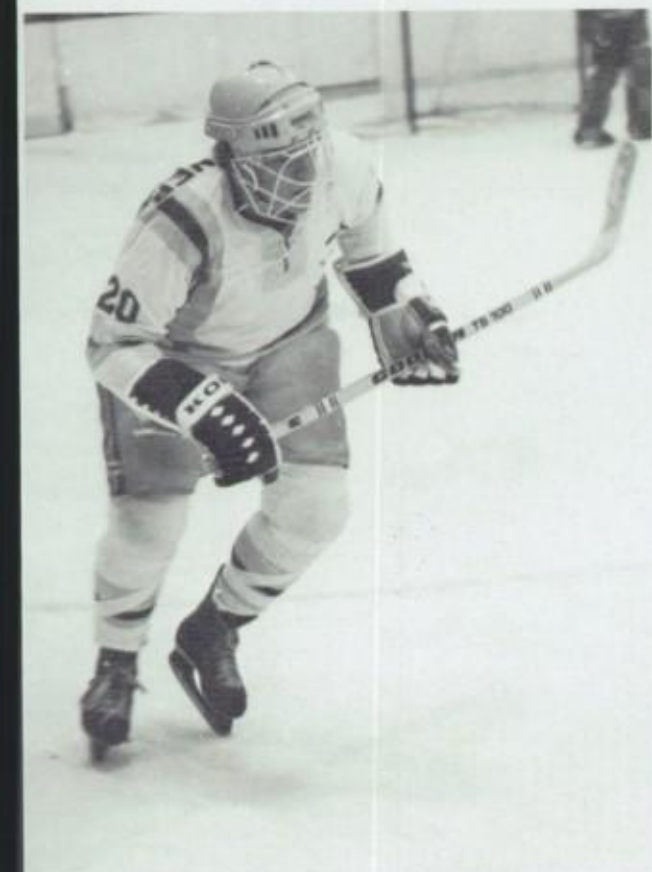

Sylvania's folly? Hardly. The old building had been quietly wasting away in the cold rain when it received the good news it had been waiting for. It had been purchased by the kindly city of Sylvania, with the financial backing of Sylvania Savings Bank, and it was finally saved.

It began with a new coat of paint and ended with a completely refurbished building.

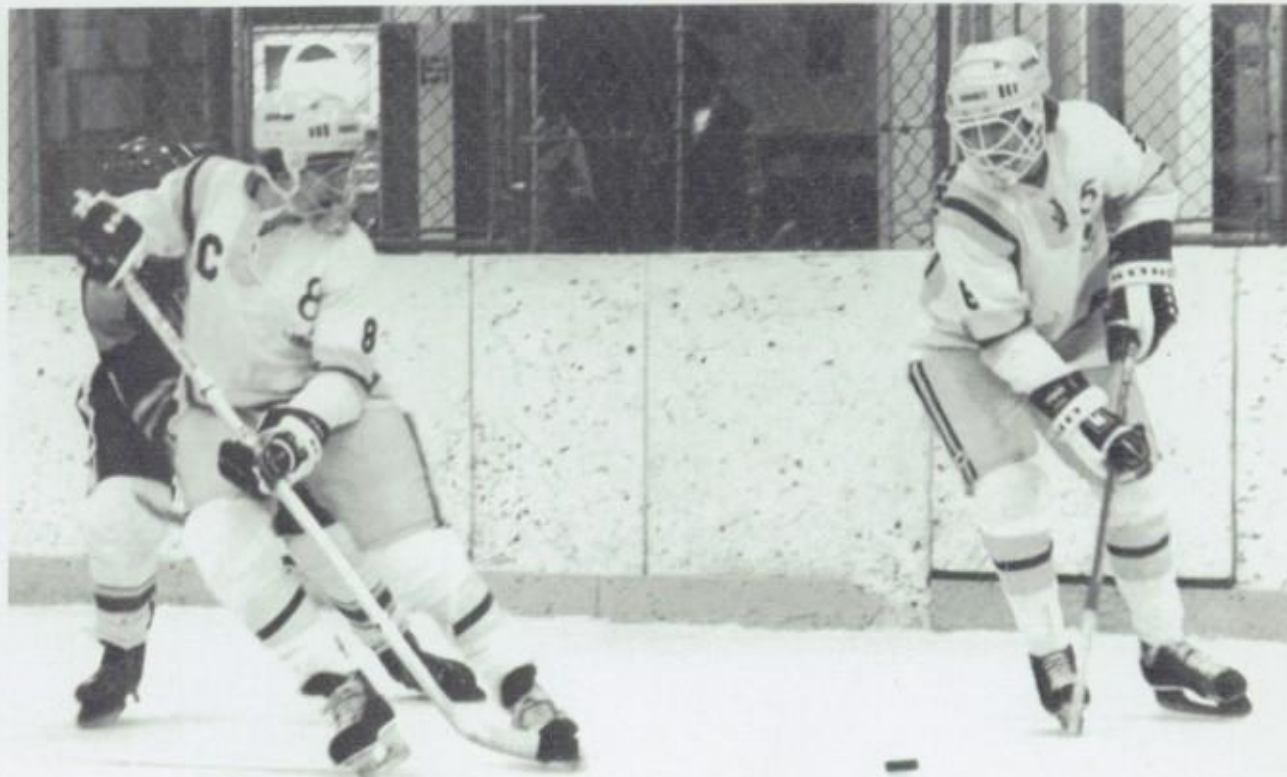

The city had the money for maintenance and also began to pump money into the arena to repair and replace broken benches. New heaters were installed in the stands and the entire building was painted, both inside and out. In addition, the tennis courts were repaved and new nets were installed.

According to JV coach Rod Monasmith, the painting of the ceiling in a bright white was an aid in seeing the puck since it eliminated the shadows. "I'd say that with the improvements, Tam O'Shanter is one of the finest arenas I've ever been in," he said.

The cost of ice time has gone up, so the team practices two mornings a week at 5:30, as well as one afternoon practice, to save money. Each morning practice costs $60, while afternoon workouts are $85. In some arenas, an hour and a half of ice time goes for as much as $150. So clearly the players benefit from the situation since they bear much of the cost for ice time.

Senior Rick Daschner moves to catch up with his teammates after clearing the puck down the ice from his defenseman's position.

The new J.V.

What is a club hockey team? And how does it differ from JV hockey? At Northview it's a group of players just below the varsity level who get together to play hockey against other club teams as well as other school's varsity teams.

When last year's junior varsity hockey team played in the GLL, they were restricted to playing only 20 games a season by league rules. But, now as a club they face no such restrictions and play up to 35 games. In a new eight-team league they can play the strongest JV teams in the area and still play regular varsity teams and scrimages.

Mr. Rod Monasmith, the team's coach said, "The players can develop their skills to a far greater extent playing better competition. We play and beat other school's varsity." He added that most of the teams in the Wolverine League are from the Detroit area, which means a lot of extra travelling.

The club finished third in the Wolverine League with a 12-7 record. Mr. Monasmith expects several of his players to make next year's varsity team.

So, the change is helping to prepare varsity hockey more thoroughly than in the past by allowing more competition. Clearly, the difference is more than just a matter of semantics.

Take a plunge

Early morning practices sometimes get boring, and sometimes he just doesn't want to go, but all of the work has paid off for junior swimmer Fred Riggs.

As a result of his work, last year Riggs placed in district and qualified at state in the 100 yard backstroke.

This year he has taken first place in both backstroke and the 500 yard freestyle in almost every meet. However, even with such a string of victories like these Riggs still goes into a meet feeling nervous. Only against the weaker opponents does he feel comfortable.

In the tougher meets, the squad puts their strength against their opponent's strength by swimming Riggs in those events.

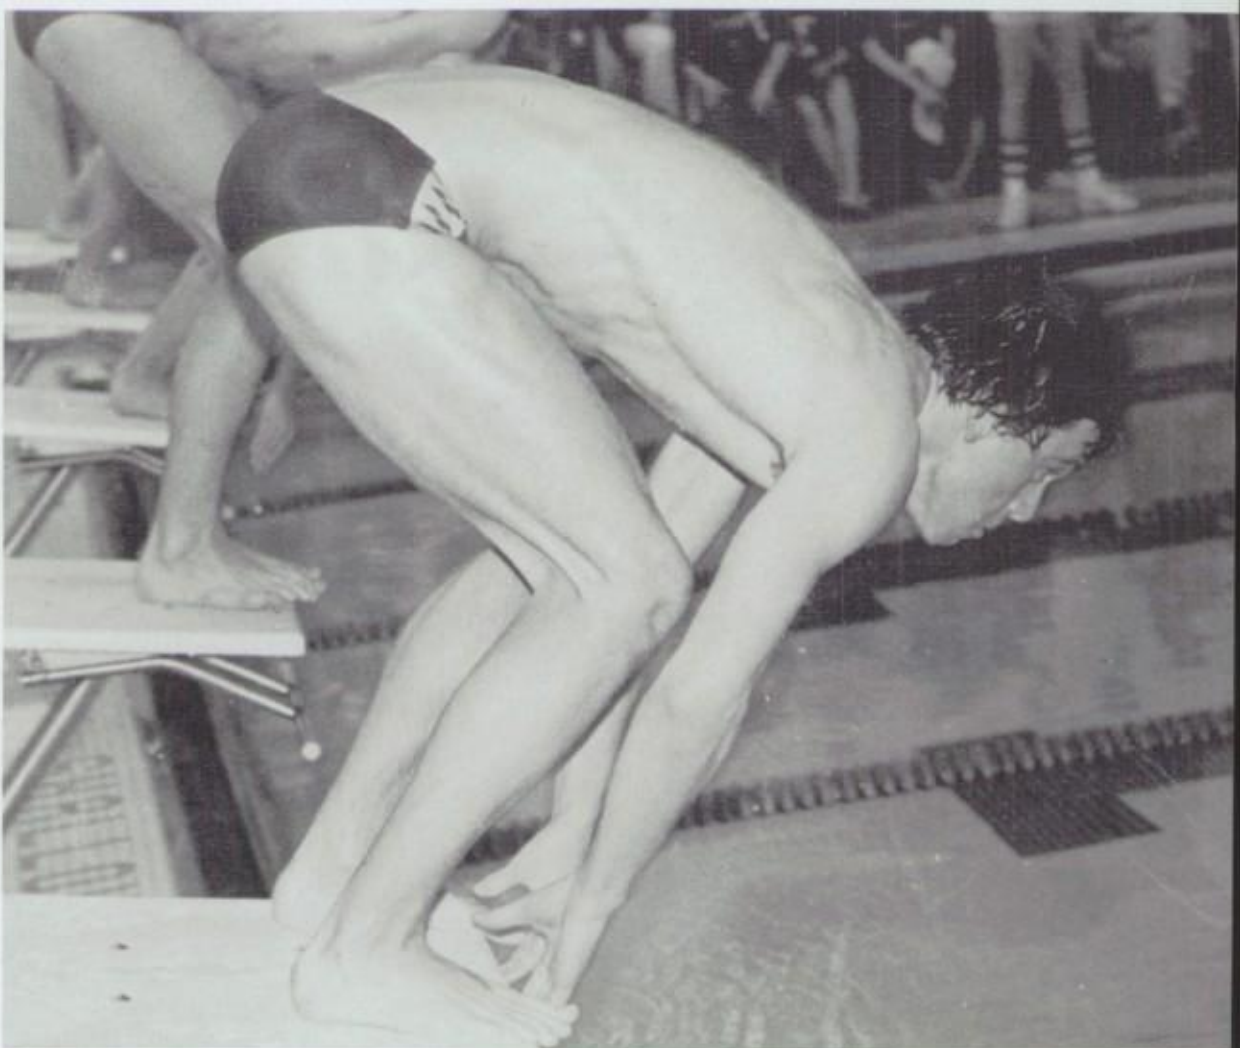

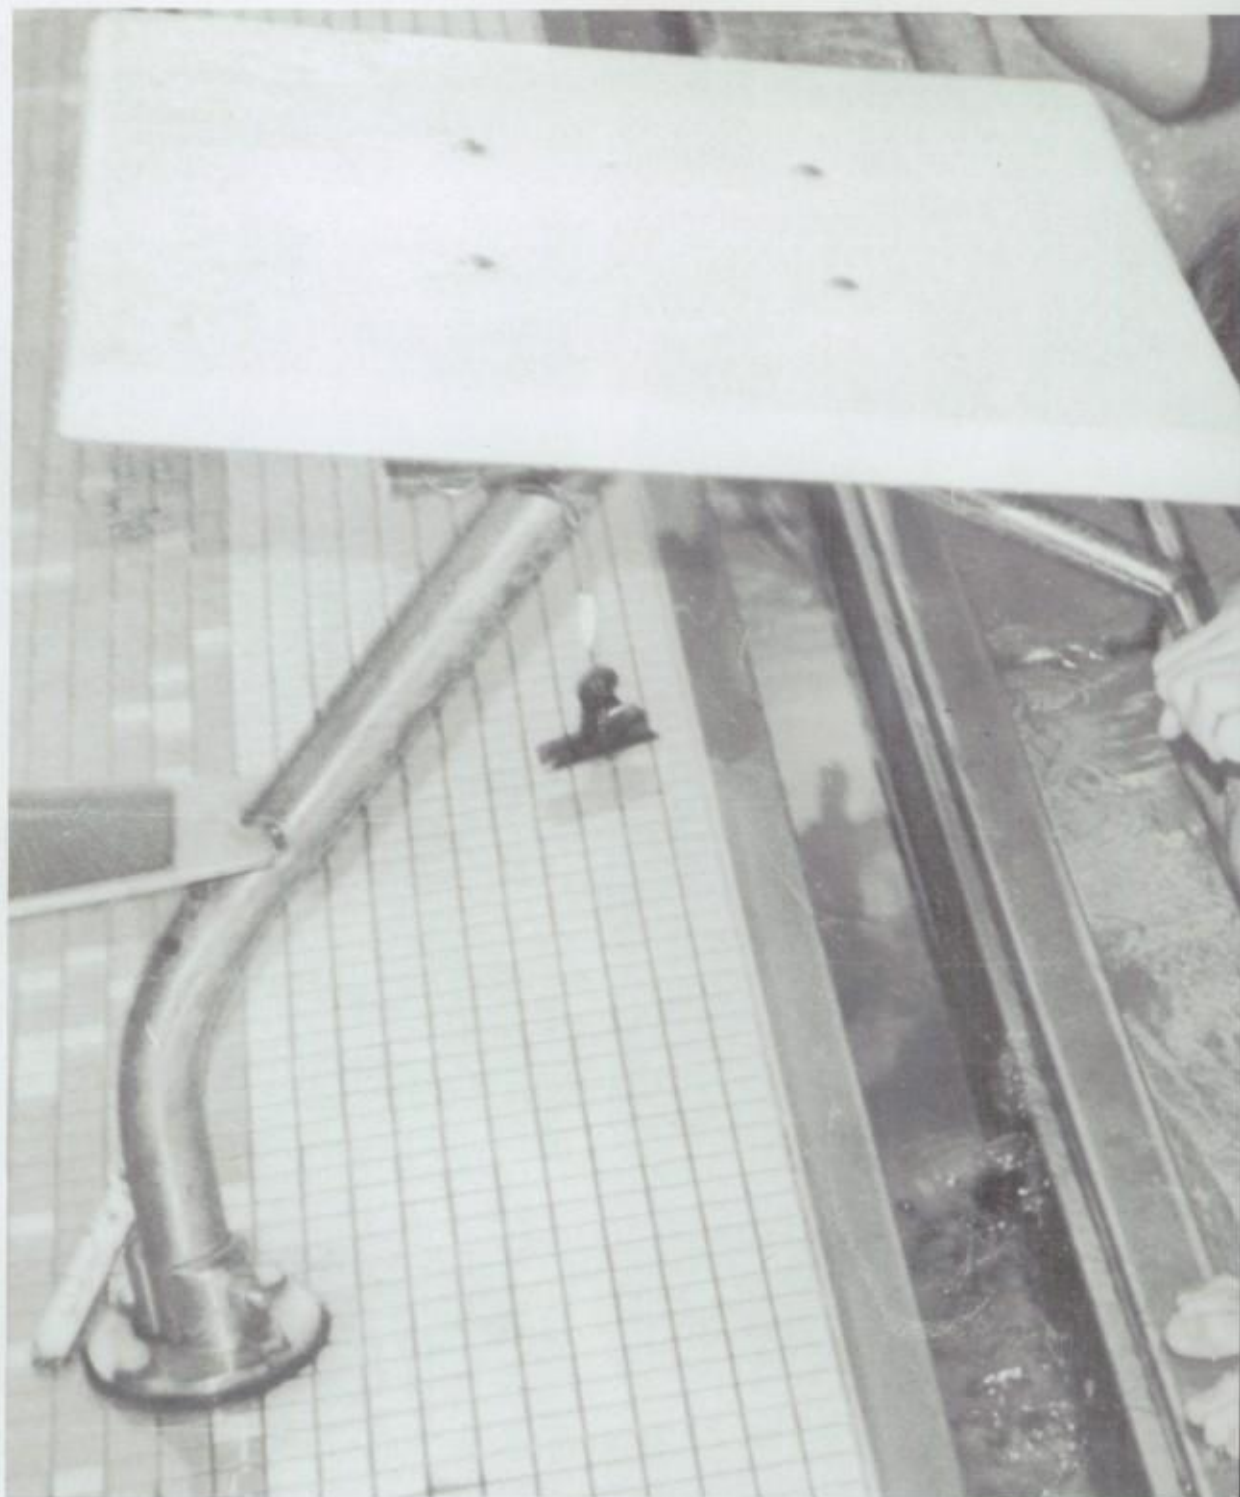

Not only is Riggs a member of the Northview swim team, he also works out and participates in AAU swimming all season until April. This takes more practicing time and sends him to Cincinnati on weekends for the large area meets.

Despite the time and monotony involved in swimming, Riggs feels the reward of winning makes it well worth it.

Backstroke before dawn

As if getting up at 6 or 7 a.m. for those sleepy heads isn't enough, try getting up and ready for a rigid, before dawn workout as the girls' swim team did this past season.

Two or three times a week the Northview aquawomen could be seen at the natatorium at 5:30 a.m. perfecting their strokes. The swimmers were required to have these before dawn workouts in order to complete the necessary practices in a week.

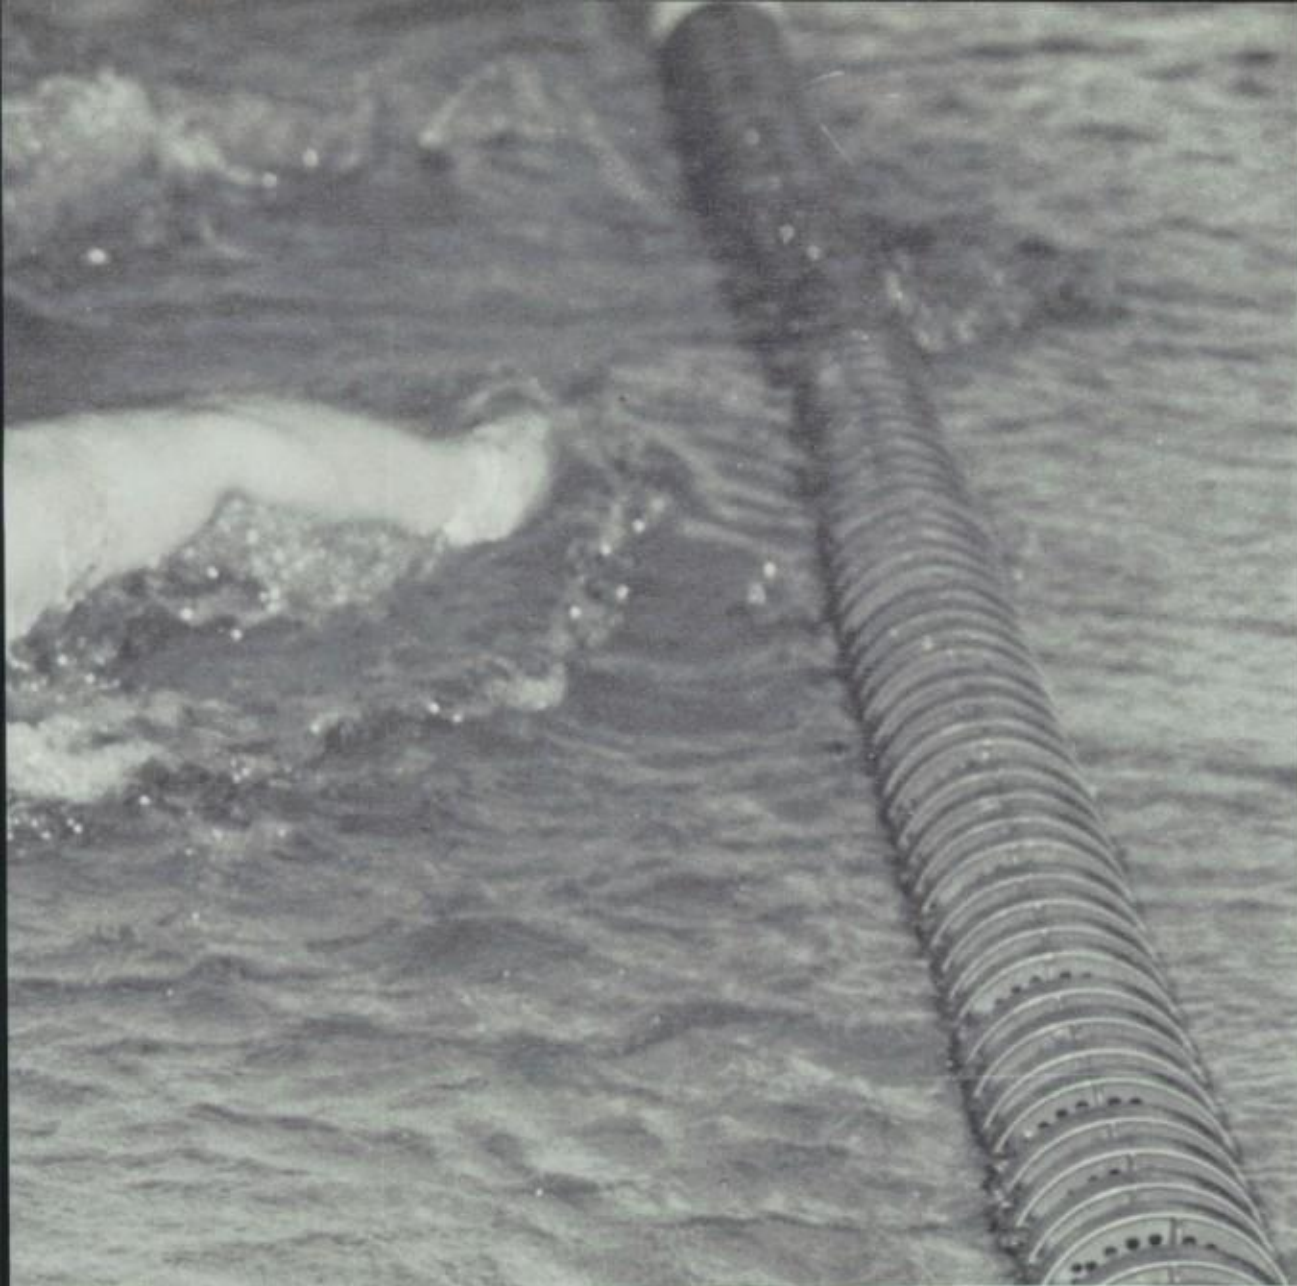

Along with the many practices and demands on the swimmers, the girls swim team had to depend on a returning senior to win most of their meets. Senior Sue Wells dominated the team, winning most of her events. "With no real increase in enrollment this year, we had to place Sue in whatever event the opposing team was strongest in," Coach Butch Graves said.

In addition to a smaller team, other changes took place. The aquawomen had their schedule changed this year, moving their season from the spring to the winter. The change was made by the Ohio High School Athletic Association so the girls swim team could have a season equal in length to that of the boys.

Even with all of these changes, the girls pulled off another winning season. The team finished with an overall record of 7-3.

Executing a forward dive is sophomore Sue Grouls.

Girls season — semi-tough

Defeating number two ranked Findlay 48-34 was one of the highlights of the girls basketball season according to both the players and coach. Even though this was the year Coach Jerry Sigler won his 100th career victory, the coach said that beating Findlay "was one of the biggest wins in my coaching career."

The team ended their season with a record of 17-3 and 5-2 in the GLL. "The girls put in a lot of hard work and were rewarded with a successful season," Coach Ron Wallace said.

Along with the Findlay game, the Ladycats also met many other challenges throughout their season. On Dec. 31 the Cats experienced their first defeat in a close game with cross-town rival Southview. At the final buzzer the Ladycats were 3 points shy of their ninth win, suffering a 51-48 loss.

However, the Ladycats proved they could pull ahead in a close game when they beat Clay 43-38 in their last regular season game. "Beating Clay was a real boost for the team morale, which was desperately needed before entering tournament play," said junior co-captain Molly Horstman.

The JV team, on the other hand, concluded their season with a 7-0 league mark and 19-1 overall. The team's only loss came to Southview 33-25, 12 points away from an undefeated season. However, the Ladycats made up for this defeat by winning their remaining 11 games.

When the Ladycats traveled to Whitmer, they were in for a surprise, but came out on top 31-29. Two weeks later, Elyria came to Northview, in a game that was "a little too close for comfort," commented Coach Wallace. The team won with a 15-foot jump shot by Michelle Davenport at the buzzer, giving them a 27-26 win.

Four days later, the Ladycats beat Napoleon in a 30-27 overtime win. "I was very proud of this team," Coach Wallace said. "They showed a lot of poise in some real close games, and they came out on top."

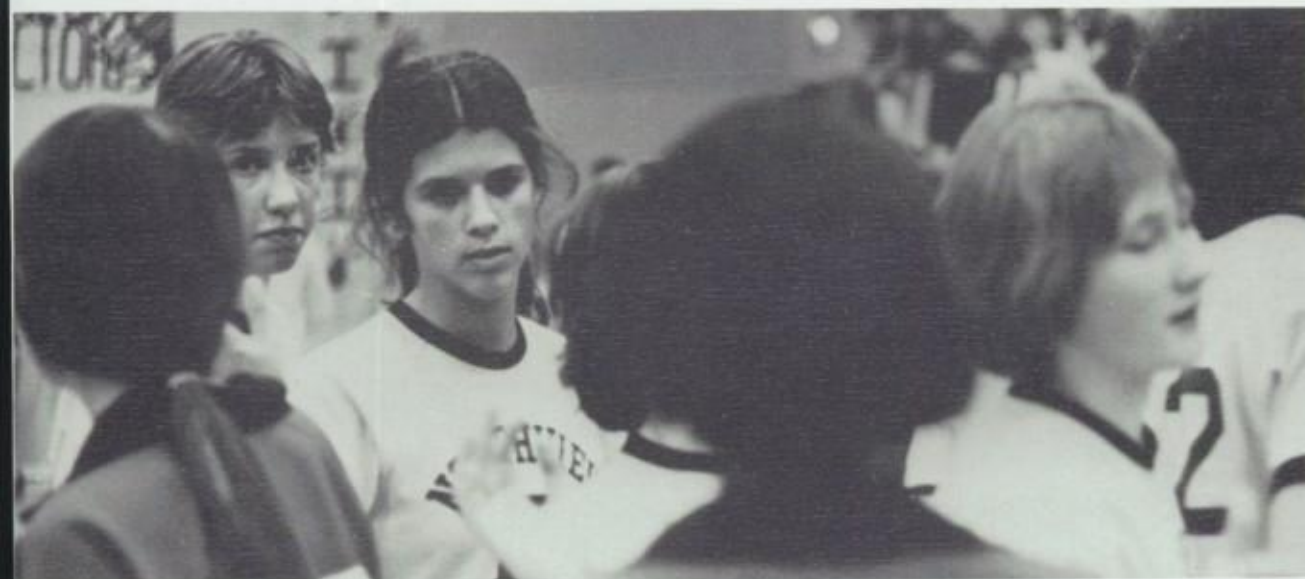

The teams worked from October to March, with a month of pre-season conditioning before beginning their season in mid-November.

The winning touch

How many coaches have over 100 wins in five coaching years? There aren't too many; however, one is Mr. Jerry Sigler, girls' basketball coach. In the past five years his teams have captured five GLL titles, been ranked in the top ten of the state for three consecutive years and advanced to district every year.

What's his secret? According to junior Molly Horstman, "He gives us the attitude that if we go out and try hard, we'll win." And, that's exactly what his teams have done. However, Mr. Sigler doesn't do the job alone. He has assistant coach Ron Wallace helping him out.

"Mr. Sigler and I aim toward the same goals in working with the kids," Coach Wallace says. "Also, he respects my opinions, which really makes me feel like I'm contributing to the team."

Jackie Zajac commented on how problems sometimes arise because Mr. Sigler is of the opposite sex. "But, in the end we still come out on top, so it's all worth it," she said.

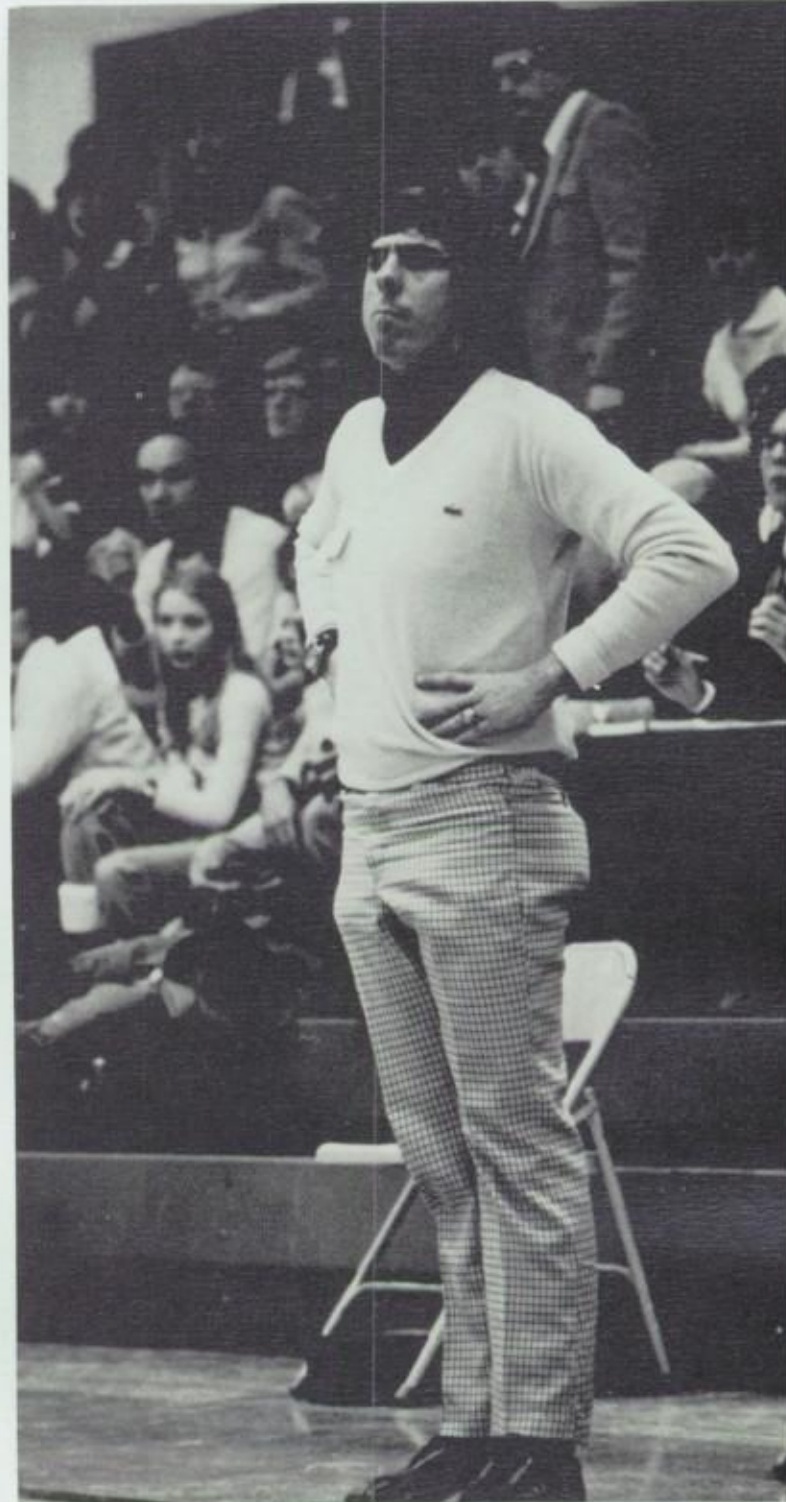

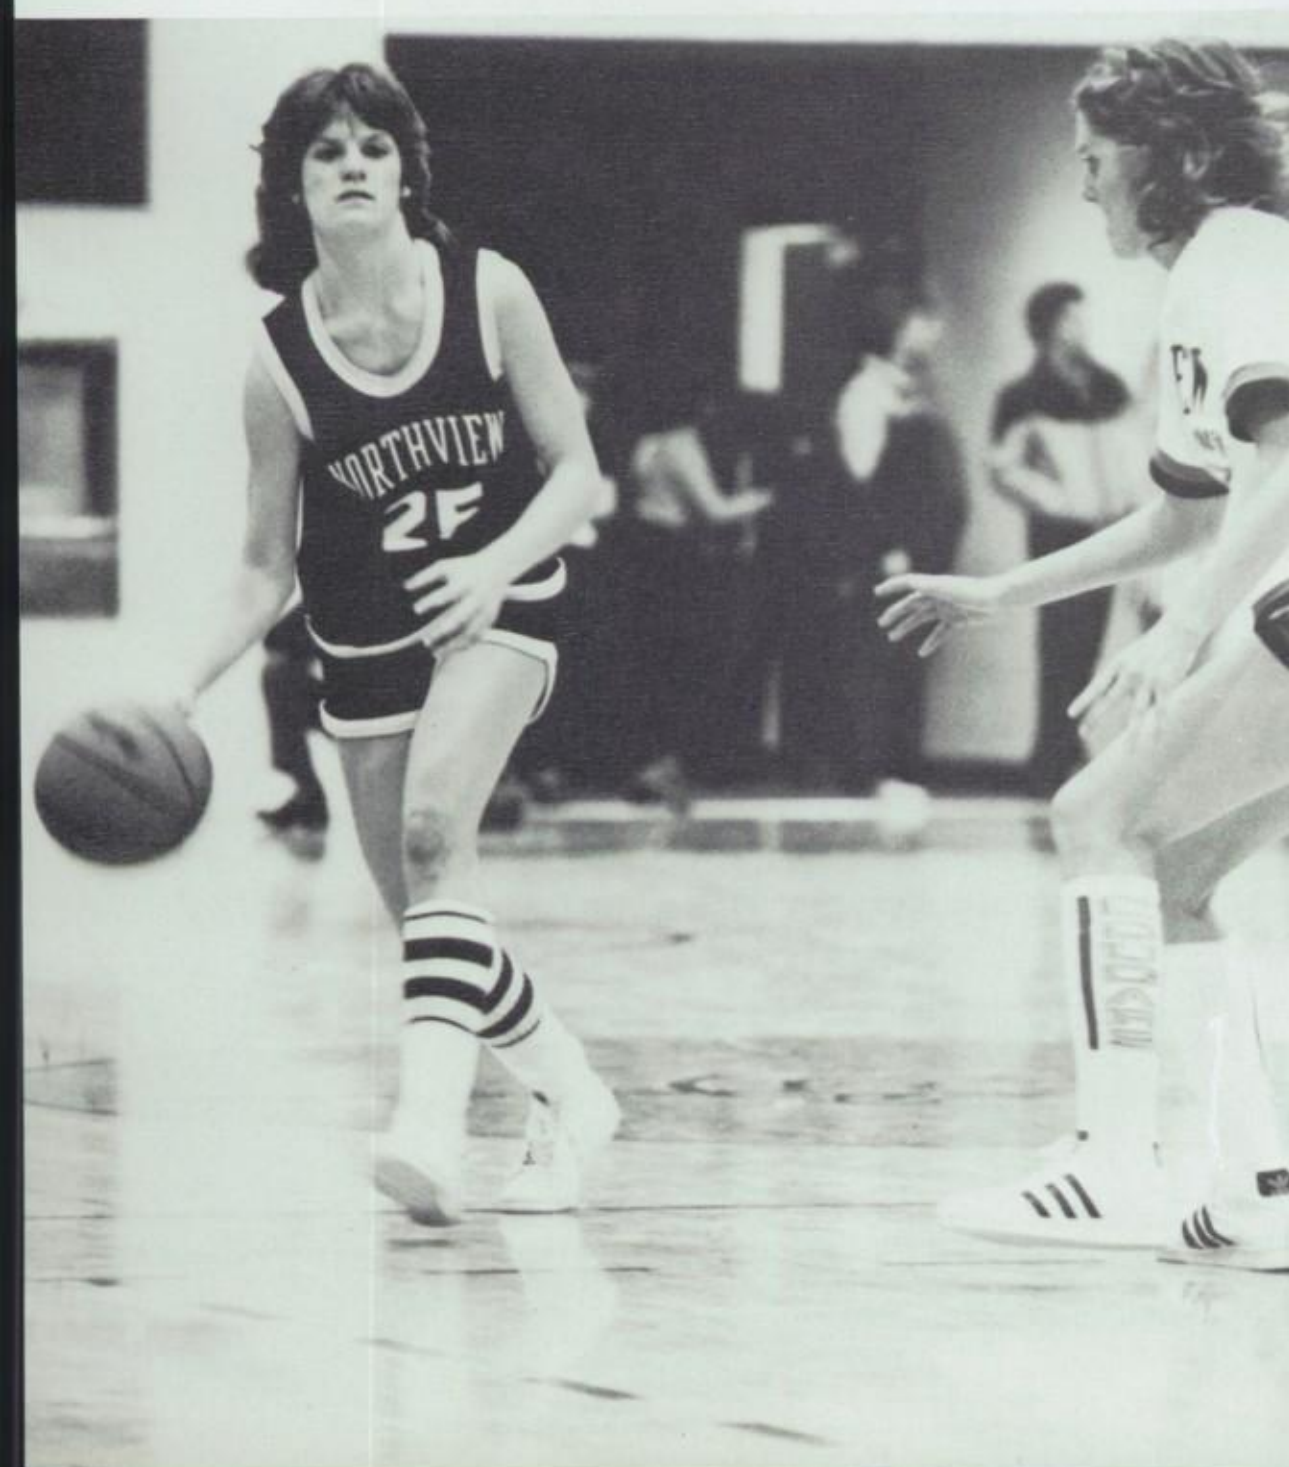

Senior Kim Wilkinson, one of the team's leading scorers, has the ability to make a shot from almost anywhere on the court.

A real asset to the team, junior co-captain Molly Horstman was one of the leading scorers and a fine ball-handler.

Junior co-captain Annette Alverson led the team in assists this year and was one of the top rebounders.

With more than 100 wins in five years, Coach Jerry Sigler shouldn't have much to complain about. Although, sometimes his team needs some re-assurance.

One of the Ladycats' six returning lettermen, sophomore Laura Mohr has proven to be a steady performer this year.

The Holiday Dance was just one of the activities Student Government used to raise money. Freshman John Cavanaugh was one of the 260 students who attended.

Activities

One day at a time

Sure, school takes up 35 hours of your time every week, but where did the other 168 hours go? Jobs, sleep and even homework took up a good deal of that time, and of course, 48 weekend hours were always the easiest to spend. For some students, the remaining free time was put to use in constructive and rewarding ways.

These students spent their extra time in various activities at Northview. Instead of eating or playing cards in commons, being a library assistant was one way to use a free period and gain half credit in the process.

Several of the foreign language clubs had activities after school hours. AFS held its annual dessert at Southview and the French Club prepared gourmet French cuisine for members' parents in October.

The pep club was always in need of people to make locker posters and signs. But being in competition with 3:00 o'clock soap operas, poster painting lacked participants. As a result, there were only a few posters, and the student body and cheerleaders had to raise spirit without signs.

By working with other schools and the community on various activities, the clubs carried on the traditional happenings that have been part of Northview.

The French Club held its annual parents' dinner in the Golden Chandelier. The members prepared, served and cleaned up after the entire gourmet meal. Sophomores Patty Schreiber and Jo Anne Gembolis serve as waitresses.

The Northview and Southview bands combined to bring back the old Sylvania large band sound at the annual Northview-Southview football game. Pictured are juniors Tom Hammond and Alan Smith.

Welcome to our world

Friends. They are one of the things that make the academic grind bearable. Often a new student has trouble making friends because he doesn't know how to go about meeting people.

To help new students at Northview make this adjustment the new student luncheon was held during October in the Golden Chandelier. At the luncheon, student government members welcomed the new students to Northview by familiarizing them with the school's clubs and activities.

After lunch, entertainment included a musical number performed by the Harmony Road Show Ensemble and a humorous speech duet entitled "Here We Are" performed by senior Nancy Clendenin and junior Bill Young.

According to Dr. Carolyn George, student government adviser, the luncheon was funded and organized entirely by student government members. Many new students found it beneficial. Junior Sue Pierce, a new student from California, said, "I knew a lot about this school when I got here, but if I hadn't known anything about Northview, the luncheon sure would have helped me. They really made me feel comfortable."

Tutoring for tots

If one found himself bombing every test and a little help was needed, there was a solution. This year, as in the past two years, there were students who were willing to help others in almost every subject.

The National Honor Society once again organized a tutoring service for those students in need of academic assistance. Senior NHS members offered their time whenever they had a free period. All that was necessary for the person to be tutored was that he sign up for a time slot.

"I wish I had known about the tutoring service when I was a freshman," said senior Tammi Bexten, now an NHS tutor. "It seems very beneficial."

The goal of a tutor, according to Mr. Clare Champion, guidance counselor, is to get the student to understand the subject well enough so a tutor will no longer be necessary.

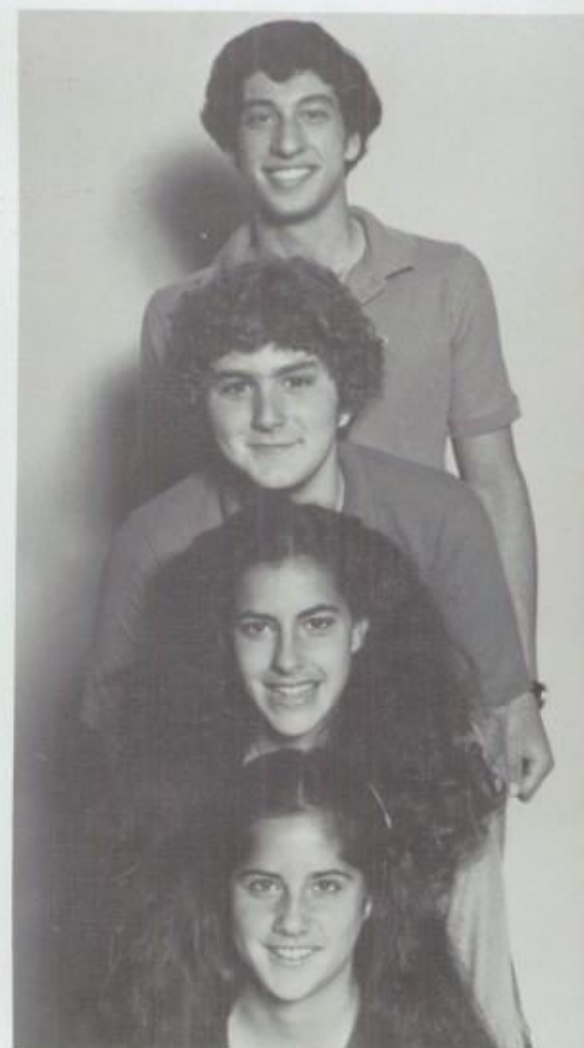

"It's different than getting help from a teacher," freshman Renee Maxwell said. "Things are taught more at your level."

The tutoring service is just one of the many activities sponsored and organized by the NHS. They had their annual carnation sale, and this year, members wrote quiz bowl questions for the quiz bowl team to practice with.

Having fun as number one

In the automotive world, the Mercedes-Benz is a symbol of excellence. It is constructed with time and care, which is shown by its durability and quality.

The speech team can be compared to the Mercedes. It is highly respected in speech circles, particularly because of its achievements at several prestigious tournaments.

The team captured first place awards at the Whitmer and Northview tournaments and at the Pittsburgh Central Catholic tournament in Pennsylvania, they placed second against 100 schools from across the country.

Now, there are other teams in Ohio that are just as successful as Northview in winning competitions. But what makes the team so unique is its attitude toward competition.

For example, speech tournaments held in eastern Ohio are commonly referred to as "bloodbaths" because schools in that area are so competitive. Many schools there place a lot of emphasis on winning tournaments. This is not so at Northview, according to Mr. Mark Ferguson, the team's first-year coach. "I think our kids have an extremely healthy attitude," he said. "My wife and I like to discourage poor sportsmanship and encourage fellowship between schools."

The coaching of Mr. Ferguson and his wife, Mary Beth Kirchner-Ferguson, played a large part in the team's success. Former high school and college competitors in speech, the couple saw what unnecessary pressure did to fellow competitors. Junior Lisa Buscani said, "They were always encouraging me and I never felt guilty if I lost at a tournament. I went on, and tried again at the next tournament."

The Fergusons' attitude toward speech and fair play reflect on the members of the speech team. "I love speech," sophomore Jeff Johnson said. "You get to meet a lot of interesting people and, well, it's fun being a winner."

Members of the speech team often become close friends and share many behind-the-scenes jokes. Speech team eyeglasses, worn by juniors Grace Arnot and Debra Pinsky, are one of those jokes.

Good morning, Northview

"Good morning. It's a beautiful day in the neighborhood. Can you say 'morning announcements?' I knew you could . . . "

Every morning during the first few minutes of second period, students at Northview had the opportunity to sleep, talk, study for a test or sometimes even listen to the morning announcements. Unknown and dreadfully cheerful voices filled them in on what was happening in school . . . "Tryouts for the fall play, Hansel and Gretel, will be held in the Little Theater after school today . . . the varsity football team won yet another game . . . Buy your sweetheart a carnation . . . "

Students heard these and other announcements unless they had commons second period, where listening to them was almost impossible due to noise.

At the same time, two students were in the office organizing the announcements while other students crammed into the small room to lend their voices for the singing commercials. Although not always pleasant to listen to, the commercials offered a different way of passing information on to students.

"That's all for the morning announcers. Have a good day in the neighborhood."

Faster at the buzzer

What literary character is buried in Yaknapatowpha County? Who wrote "Captain, My Captain"?

Most students could not answer these questions in a quiz bowl match. However, senior Paul Fine could and did answer questions like these during his four years of quiz bowl play at Northview.

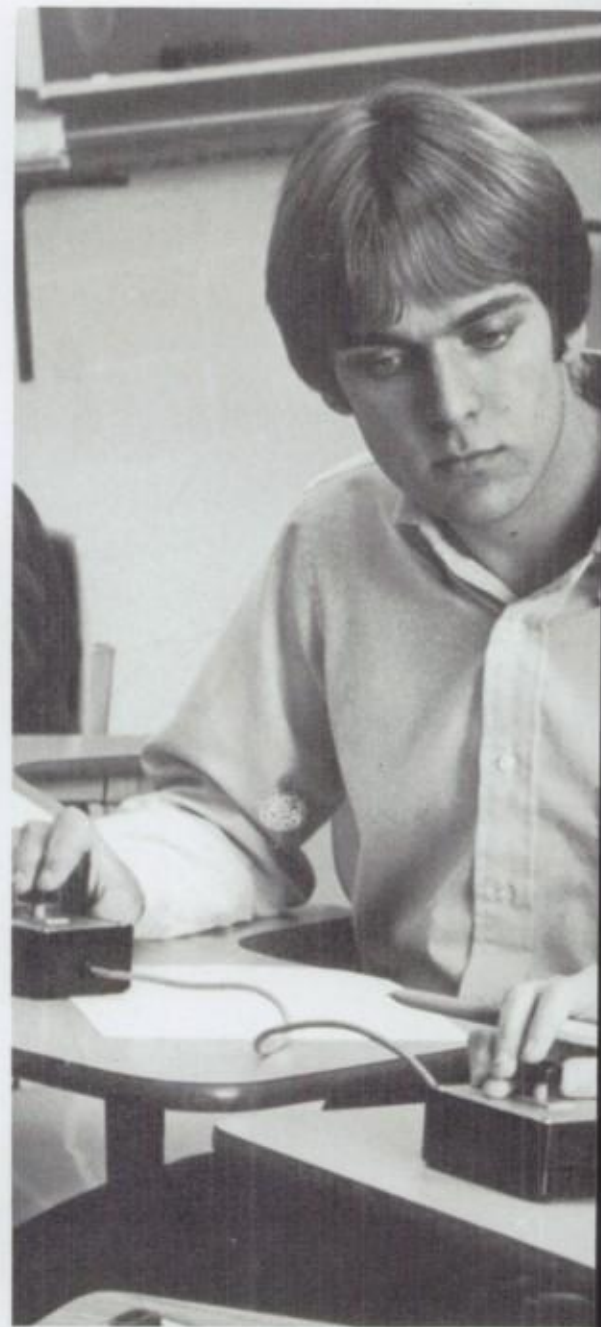

Fine began playing on the quiz bowl team his freshman year. Since then, he has scored thousands of points and has been a major contributor to the team's success.

After being on the team so long, he is able to answer some quiz bowl questions before Coach Vivian Hutchisson is finished asking them. Mrs. Hutchisson said, "He is uniquely intelligent, a very quick thinker. He also has tremendous recall of questions."

The other members of the team played a large part in the team's success also. Team members Tod Rieger, Steve Rothschild and David Fine made it possible for the quiz bowl team to consistently outscore their opponents by sizeable margins.

This year Coach Hutchisson gave the team alternates a lot of playing time. Alternates Lisa Buscani, Mike Dennis, Jim Klein and Andy Muchow received several chances to play.

According to Mrs. Hutchisson, the team is extremely strong. Instead of playing the other team, they actually play each other in quiz bowl matches because they all know the answers. "It comes down to who is faster at the buzzer," she said.

There's no place like home?

Travel! Adventure! Excitement! ... in Toledo? Yes! For senior Mimi Braekvelt, this year's AFS student from Belgium.

Mimi had already graduated from her high school in Belgium but chose to attend Northview for a year to learn more about the American culture.

Here, Mimi fell right into place. She loved her new family, especially because of her new 14-year-old brother. This was quite a change for Mimi, as she comes from an all-girl family.

Mimi did a great deal of traveling before coming here. She has been throughout Europe and to Africa with her family.

On the other hand, senior Lorie Keating had never been off the American continent before her AFS trip last summer to Indonesia.

As Lorie expected, everything, including the food, was very different. "The food was great," said Lorie. Since it was a tropical island she lived on, Lorie ate many new and unusual fruits. Meals, which were eaten mostly with her fingers and a spoon, always consisted of rice and then some kind of fresh fish or meat. "Sometimes it was spicy," Lorie said, "but I tried not to eat the food that was too hot."

Just as Lorie's sister got her interested in AFS, senior Tricia Carl's sister (who went to Bolivia in the summer of '78) did the same for Tricia. "Once I decided to go, choosing where was very easy," Tricia said. "I saw a John Denver special in Australia and knew that was the place."

Once there, Tricia found many things backwards, ranging from the seasons to driving. She also found some problems with the metric system when cooking, but these were quickly corrected when she tasted her mis-measured creations.

All three girls saw what life was like somewhere other than home. They had to be willing to try different, and sometimes totally unfamiliar things that are everyday things in different cultures.

A delicious way to learn

Many times when parents ask their children what their clubs or organizations at school do, a common reply is, "Aw, nuthin' much." So, even though they may dig into their wallets and pay their children's club dues, most parents are unaware of exactly what the club does.

To eliminate this, the French club held a gourmet dinner in the Golden Chandelier, to inform parents about the country their children were studying. "We held the dinner mainly to be nice to the parents," said Mrs. Linda Zabor, French club adviser. "But it was also a great way to let them know what was going on."

The menu included French onion soup, salad Nicoise (a salad prepared with tomatoes and anchovies), chicken served in wine sauce and a variety of French pastries for dessert. Everything was prepared and served by club members.

After dinner, all attending sang a popular French song, Pour un Instant. The song is used in classes as well as in the club to familiarize students with French vocabulary and pronunciation.

Sophomore Sherry Wrest said that her parents really enjoyed the dinner. "They thought it was a nice, personal way to find out what I was doing."

Pink slips bring peril to students

feuille rose = pink slip papellito colore de rose = pink slip rosarote zettel = pink slip pink slip = BUSTED

When you arrived at your class, the pink slip was waiting. It was all over. You skipped that class and got caught. The only alternatives now were to serve the detention or fight it out with Mr. Heiman. On the way to the office, you notice some attendance workers leaving to perform their daily duty, collecting attendance cards.

Many people think that the job of attendance worker is a simple one. According to senior Chris Growden, this assumption is not correct. The attendance workers perform many jobs, including filing admit slips and delivering new attendance cards to teachers at the beginning of the year. Also, during scheduling time when the office is crushed under a heavy work-load, the workers help by filing and alphabetizing schedules.

One of Chris's least favorite duties is delivering pink slips. When asked how she felt about this aspect of her job, she remarked that she felt bad for the people she was delivering them to. But, she said, "There is really nothing I could do."

Long live the queen

"May I have the envelope, please? Thank you. The winner is ... Teresa Roehrig."

Last December, five nominees from four high schools in the Toledo area competed in the annual VICA (Vocational Industrial Clubs of America) queen contest in the Little Theater.

Roehrig was selected to be the girl who would represent Toledo VICA chapters at regional competition. From there according to Mrs. Linda Brenner coordinator of the contest, if the girl wins, she goes to state and perhaps national competition. "It's just like a beauty pageant. Teresa will now serve as our ambassador of goodwill," she said.

Each girl is involved in some division of VICA, such as cosmetology or Diversified Health Occupations. As part of the contest, the girls had to take a written test concerning their course of study for evaluation by an English teacher.

In addition to the essay, the girls were also rated on poise and beauty and given a question to answer before the judges. The judges were representatives from The Sylvania Herald, WDHO-TV and The Patricia Stevens Modeling School.

Junior Teresa Roehrig, the new VICA queen, had to submit a written test about her field. With her is escort Bill Moore.

Master of ceremonies junior Stephanie Burlew was in charge of the several events in the VICA queen contest.

Making a mark

Have you ever wondered who was behind the voice you heard on the radio? Who wrote the article you read in the paper? In some cases, those people might have been Northview students.

For instance, junior David Efroymsen worked at WLQR, an easy listening, FM radio station. A control board operator licensed by the Federal Communications Commission, he was in charge of playing the music during his shift.

"Radio is a great profession," Efroymsen said. "I like being part of something that keeps people informed and entertained."

Other students informed and entertained readers through publications such as The Student Prints and The Sylvania Herald.

The Student Prints, published by Journalism II students, was not only distributed inside the school, but at various stores and shops throughout the community, such as Lindau's drug store. According to Julia Murbach, co-editor of The Prints, the staff did this because they felt it was important to keep the community updated on school events.

"There are a lot of kids who don't tell their parents anything about this school," she said. "Sometimes the only way parents can find out is through the paper."

Members of The Prints' staff also wrote about sporting events for The Sylvania Herald. "We do this," said Karen Hammer, a member of the staff, "because it gives us a chance to write in a professional atmosphere, as well as informing the community about the school."

The staff was responsible for most aspects of newspaper production. Here, senior Leslie Chabler assembles a paper.

Each year, members of the staff submit some of their work to newspaper competitions. Preparing articles for one such competition is senior Sandy Hampton.

A new direction

The sounds coming out of room A-8 at 8:30 in the morning were strange if the listener was unfamiliar with what was going on behind the doors.

This was the time for A Capella choir warm-ups. The scales were led by a new director this year, Mr. Ben Ayling, a music graduate of Bowling Green State University.

Mr. Ayling brought a new style to Northview's choir by getting them involved in activities outside of the regularly scheduled concerts. Two radio programs, a trip to Vermillion High School and a combined choral effort with the University of Toledo's Choir in UT's Doerman Theater were highlights of the year.

It also was a year highlighted with controversies, one of which was the school board ruling on the holiday celebrations. Part of this ruling stated that seasonal religious music could only be played for its musical value and not for its religious content.

For the December concert most of the songs that were sung had Christian overtones. "By choosing those songs I was not trying to convert anyone," Mr. Ayling explained. "I chose those pieces for the choir because of their good literary content and musical history."

Apparently no one was offended by the winter concert program, as Mr. Ayling received only positive comments.

Making it up the scales

Bach, Beethoven and Brahms are familiar names to the people in the choir room during periods 5abc. Why? These people are the members of the orchestra and have played many of these classical artists' compositions.

It all began with Mary had a Little Lamb and At Pierrot's Door in fifth grade. Learning simple melodies and the major scales developed into three part harmony by the end of the year.

In junior high, other instruments began to join the leagues of the four string orchestra. Members of the band were playing along to make a full orchestra.

Finally came high school and, along with it, more experiences. Not only performing in concerts with the brass, woodwinds and percussion, but playing during the holiday season with the A Capella choir and participating in state contests were also included on the agenda.

Outside the school-planned orchestra activities, some of the students were active in the Toledo Youth Orchestra. This organization consists of exceptional high school musicians from the Toledo area. It gave them a chance to perform in a professional atmosphere.

Some of these members plan on continuing their music after graduation. "I want to teach instrumental music and be a professional musician," said senior Betsy Thal, who will be studying music at the University of Michigan.

The climb up the musical scale will end for many, but for some it will continue after high school.

The bass line in the orchestra's music is played by freshman Nick Ray.

By plucking the strings of her cello, junior Jenny Booth makes a sharp, crisp sound.

During the year junior Laura Sund and sophomores Susan Grouls and Susan Croston, members of the band, joined the orchestra to practice two times a week.

Spirit, band go hand-in-hand

Who were the students that showed up at every football game, whether it was a heat wave or a soaking rain? Who were the students at the pep assemblies supplying the pep? They were the members of the Northview band.

To prepare for the games and assemblies, practice began two weeks before school started. The notes and intonation were far from perfect, but the talent and devotion were present in every member.

Almost everyone was looking forward to the first game, freshmen members especially. Freshman Matt Lindau later admitted, "I felt proud, but I was scared. I was afraid I was going to go left instead of right on my pinwheels and look like the tuba in the phone ad."

The season began with a combined show featuring the Northview and Southview bands. Putting the two bands together created the feeling of having one Sylvania band again.

The rest of the marching season went smoothly until Oct. 24 — the home game against Start High School. On that Friday night the rain literally came down in buckets. After the second quarter the field was so covered with mud that the half-time show was performed on the sidelines.

Not only did the marching band provide music at the football games, but the pep band also added life to the pep assemblies. Some students were asked what they thought it would be like without the band. "It wouldn't be rowdy. People get rowdy during the songs," according to sophomore Lori Miller.

What would an assembly be like without the band? Senior Julie Fitch said, "It would be the BIG NOTHING. ZIP-O. The music makes the assemblies."

The students' awareness of the part the band played in various school activities throughout the year only helps document that the band played a definite part in promoting spirit.

The steady beat of the Northview percussion takes a rest after the Bedford halftime show.

The band had many opportunities to play the Wildcat Fight Song this year after each Wildcat touchdown.

"Showcase for Band" is one of the favorites of the band. Sophomore Scott Hafner is caught doing the hand movements to the song.

The rain did not stop freshman Bill Bostleman, yet it did prevent the Start band from playing at the Oct. 24 game. The band had just dry-cleaned their uniforms for President Carter's visit to Toledo the next day at Start High School.

Icing on the cake

4 ... 3 ... 2 ... 1 ... 0. The time on the clock ticks off its last few seconds to end the first half of the football game. For the football players it means a time to review the first half, but for the marching band, it's time to work.

The notes flow out of the horns of the black and gold figures on the field, but not everyone on the field is playing an instrument. Four of those half time performers are holding flags and five others are twirling batons, and sometimes rifles.

Majorettes and flag girls have always been a part of the Northview band, but this was the first year rifles became a part of it. As a result, the majorettes have doubled their duties. When they were not twirling a baton they twirled a rifle.

To learn this talent, the girls went to summer camp. The camp concentrated on teaching and improving the girl's rifle twirling skills. They also were given routine ideas.

Like the icing on a cake, the majorettes, rifle corps and flag girls tried to accent the flavor of the band.

Senior flag girls Sue Durnford and Tammi Bexten take time out from practice for a little comic relief.

After their half time routine the majorettes and flags wear their coats and gloves because of the cold, but continued to cheer on the Wildcats with other band members.

A change in tempo

After the last whistle of the football season was blown, after the stands were empty and the stadium was locked for the final time, what did the halftime performers do for the remainder of the year? These people, the members of the marching band, became the members of the concert band.

The 80 students who made up the band practiced for one and a half hours each day. They learned pieces for district and state competition as well as music for their winter and spring concerts.

The winter concert, which was held Feb. 2, consisted of high-stepping military marches and more serious symphonic melodies. It was played before a full auditorium.

And, then some of the concerts were given for reasons other than pure entertainment. Several times each year the band played for the fourth, fifth and sixth graders, hoping to interest the youthful listeners into taking lessons during the following school year.

So, where did the halftime performers go after playing the last chorus of the Wildcat fight song on a crisp autumn night? They moved to the Little Theater for concerts on cold winter nights and to elementary gyms for recruiting concerts on balmy spring days.

During the fall, sophomore Gina Cooke was a majorette, but after the end of the marching season she became a flutist during the rest of the year.

Moving melodies

Lined up on stage during an A Capella choir performance is very much like being a crayon in a box of 64 crayolas. Each crayon must stand straight up in its own space. But when someone picks that crayon out of its place, it can be used to express that person's feelings in a splash of color.

Those students who disliked being an unused crayon standing in a line of 64 could have joined one of the music ensembles that, in addition to singing, were able to move and dance. There were four of these groups to choose from.

For instance, if a person were into song and dance routines, the Harmony Road Show could have been a good choice. Or maybe Studio A-8, a girls chorus, would have been more suitable. For the individual who was into performing classical music, the Madrigal Singers might have had appeal. And, for those who were just starting out in high school music, they could have joined Soundstage, the freshman mixed chorus.

There were other alternatives for those who did not want to be one of 64 in the musical crayon box.

Mr. Ben Ayling, the director of the Harmony Road Show, stops the dancing to perfect tone quality.

There's a spirit in the air

More often than not, a comment concerning school spirit was most commonly ended with something like: "We could sure use some of it around here."

True, even Christmas spirit took a holiday by board decree, and some other types of spirit took a holiday due to student disinterest. Although the enthusiasm sort of spirit may have been lacking at basketball games, a different type of spirit was still present every day.

Even when everyone had left, the building still held the feeling or "spirit" of the students who had spent seven hours there. The commons, for example, still held many remnants of students such as Dorito's wrappers, empty juice glasses and an occasional sucker's wrapper.

When waiting by the gym doors after a practice or a meeting, the halls still seemed to carry the sounds of several hundred students changing classes.

The 1,199 students left a special spirit in the air that could be sensed just by being present in the halls or classrooms. So, next time someone says, "Our school has no spirit," ask them what kind they are talking about.

A vocational course for juniors and seniors, DECA had an enrollment of 20 students. Working in class are seniors Mike Moyer and Paul Marsico.

Senior Dana Paskiet (center), was crowned Homecoming queen at the Northview-Clay football game. She was escorted by senior Dave Brown.

Looks like we made it!

Although four years of high school have come to an end, seniors can remember that those might have been "the best years of their lives."

When they recall those years, they'll reflect on the good times and those that were not so good. The acquaintances and friends they have made will be in their thoughts for years to come.

Four years ago they entered their first year of high school. Physical science and freshmen English were, for some, the highlights of ninth grade. However, most students found home, labs and Romeo and Juliet to be somewhat less than a highlight.

They were the first class with the privilege of a silent study hall to help them get their homework done. Arriving at Pizza Inn after football and basketball games in cars chauffeured by mom and dad added to the memories of that freshman year.

Sophomore year was the next rung on the ladder. They were no longer freshmen, but not yet upperclassmen. Commons took the place of study hall, and by the end of the year most had gained even more independence by obtaining their driver's licenses. They no longer had to rely on mom and dad for rides.

This was also the year that many of their classmates participated in varsity sports. It was also the year that practically the entire student body left the school after a spring pep assembly to walk to Southview.

It was during junior year that some students entered the vocational programs. For all students, however, American history and American lit were a part of the required curriculum. Junior Prom topped off the year's festivities.

Senior year, the year many had looked forward to with great anticipation finally arrived. This was their chance to prove that they were the leaders of the school, next to teachers and the administration, of course. Homecoming was sponsored by their class in October.

Seniors had the privilege of early dismissal. Some were able to as early as 11:00 with a work permit; others left after sixth period.

As the end of the first semester came around, they took their last exams. Cat's Meow, Senior Prom, Skip Day and graduation were highlights of their high school years which still lay ahead.

Before the powderpuff game, the senior girls gathered at Carrie Fanning's house to decorate their cars for the caravan.

Photographers Todd Hall and Martin McHugh take a break from their cameras to hold the sticks for the annual powderpuff football game.

A scholar—athlete

For a high school student to excel in both athletics and academics is uncommon. However, for one senior, Andy Muchow, participation in sports and a high class rank were not unusual.

First of all, in recognition of his outstanding scholastic record, Andy was selected to participate in the Martin W. Essex School for the Gifted, held last August on The Ohio State University campus. Fifty-nine other students from Ohio also attended the school. Each day they learned about a different field, including engineering, government and the sciences. "I would definitely recommend it for the junior selected this year," stated Andy.

Andy was also a member of the Northview cross country and track teams during his four years in high school. His efforts earned him two awards, Most Valuable Player and Most Improved Player, for cross country his senior year.

Although he dislikes being called "gifted," the description certainly fits Andy Muchow, for he is both a talented athlete and an exceptional student.

Andy runs an average of 7½ miles per day and participates in many local races.

Rare student

"Outstanding vocational students are rare," said Mrs. Nancy Sundermeir, food service adviser. However, having shown a great deal of potential not only in her class work but also as president of the program, Karen Domschot was considered such a student by Mrs. Sundermeir.

During her two years in the program, she has learned many things which have been valuable in the two restaurant jobs she has held. Karen bused tables at the Franklin House and further broadened her restaurant experience while working at the Salty Dog, where she bused tables as well as worked in the kitchen.

Planning to major in restaurant management, her high school training will be continued at Owens Technical College in the fall.

Preparing desserts for the day's meal at the Golden Chandelier is senior Karen Domschot.

A hidden talent

Horseback riding has been a favorite pastime for centuries. Twelve years ago, one young girl named Cara Potter took up the hobby and has spent much of her time working with horses ever since.

Cara, now a senior, has been in hunter competition for seven years. At the age of 13, she bought her own horse, Sam, a hunter or pleasure horse. She has since acquired another, Spitz, a jumper. Cara rides for the Michigan Hunter Jumper Association, and for the last two years she has been training at Hunter's Run Stables.

Much time and effort are spent on her riding. Cara previously worked out with her horses almost every day of the week. Since last fall, however, she has been employed at Churchill's Supermarket and can spend only about three or four times a week at the stables. "You learn a lot of responsibility from taking care of the horses," she said.

Contests in this field continue through most of the year. The shows Cara takes part in are both class A, national, and class B, state competition. "The competition can get very demanding," she said. However, Cara has been very successful.

Last summer, after earning the most total points, she received the reserve championship in hunter competition on Sam. Her other horse, Spitz, earned the jumper championship also.

Competition days can be very long, for Cara begins to prepare long before the show starts. Rising at 4 a.m., Cara must get one or both of her horses ready for the day's activities.

Warming up before competition at Hunter's Run Stables is senior Cara Potter.

Cream of the crop

During every student's junior year, they are given the opportunity to take the PSAT/NMSQT, the qualifying test for entering the Merit Scholarship Program. Those college-bound students who score extremely high and meet eligibility requirements are identified and honored. After taking this test in October of 1979, nine students in the Class of '81 earned National Merit semi-finalist or commended honors.

Two seniors were named semi-finalists. Liz Maxwell and Paul Fine achieved this honor by scoring in the top one-half of one percent of the total graduating seniors in Ohio.

Seven other seniors were commended: Abby Edinger, Bob Jacobs, Martin McHugh, Andy Muchow, Julia Murbach, Steve Rothschild and Betsy Thal. They were among the top five percent of nationwide test takers. Scores of those who are commended demonstrate exceptional ability in academics, but are below the qualifying level required to reach semi-finalist standing and, therefore, not eligible to compete for the Merit Scholarships.

The students who have been named by the program are very intelligent. However, they do not spend all of their time buried in books. These people are involved in many extracurricular activities: Student Prints, orchestra, Wyandotte staff, quiz bowl, photography, basketball, cross country, morning announcers and after school jobs, to name just a few.

The Merit Program receives grants for scholarships from corporations, businesses, professional organizations, individuals and some colleges and universities. These sponsors have helped students attend institutions of higher learning for 25 years.

This year's co-editor of The Student Prints, senior Liz Maxwell is shown above stuffing the newspaper before it is put out for circulation.

During a pep assembly for the Rogers football game, emcee Steve Rothschild dresses as a typical freshman who gave his shoe to the Wildcat football team.

As co-editor of The Student Prints, Julia Murbach spends at least 30 hours a week working on the student paper.

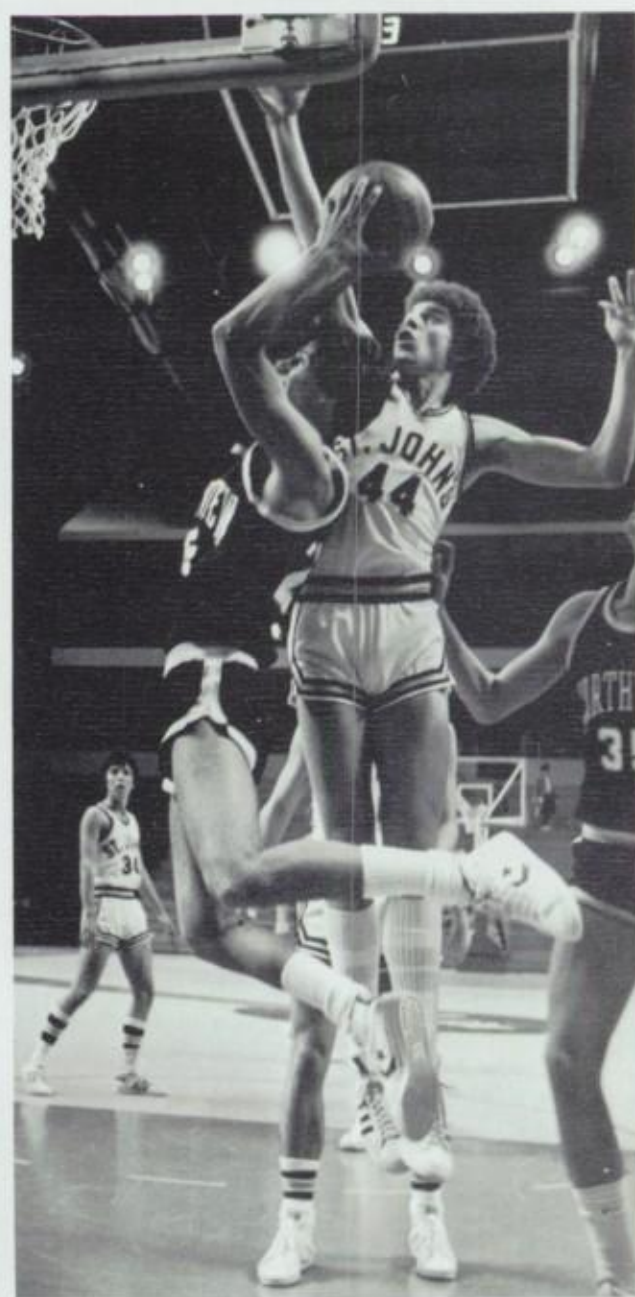

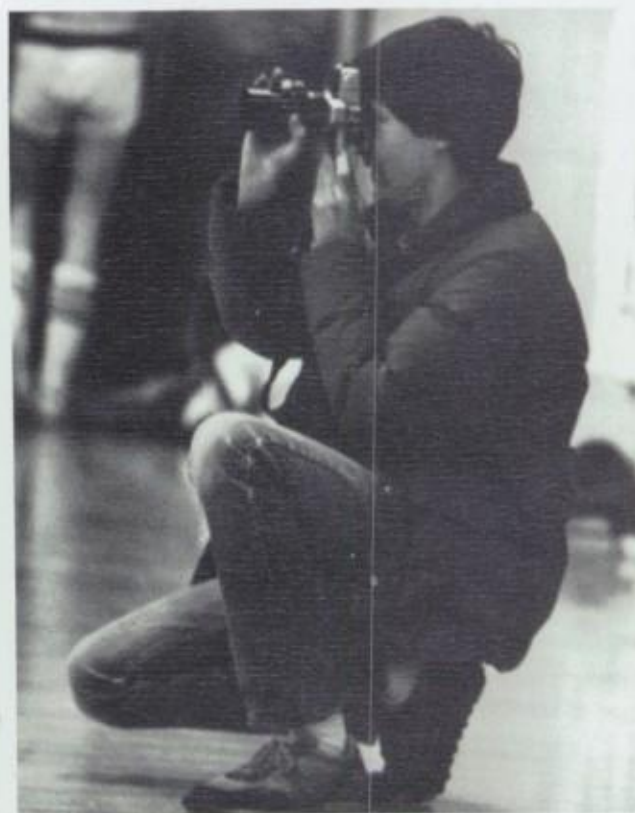

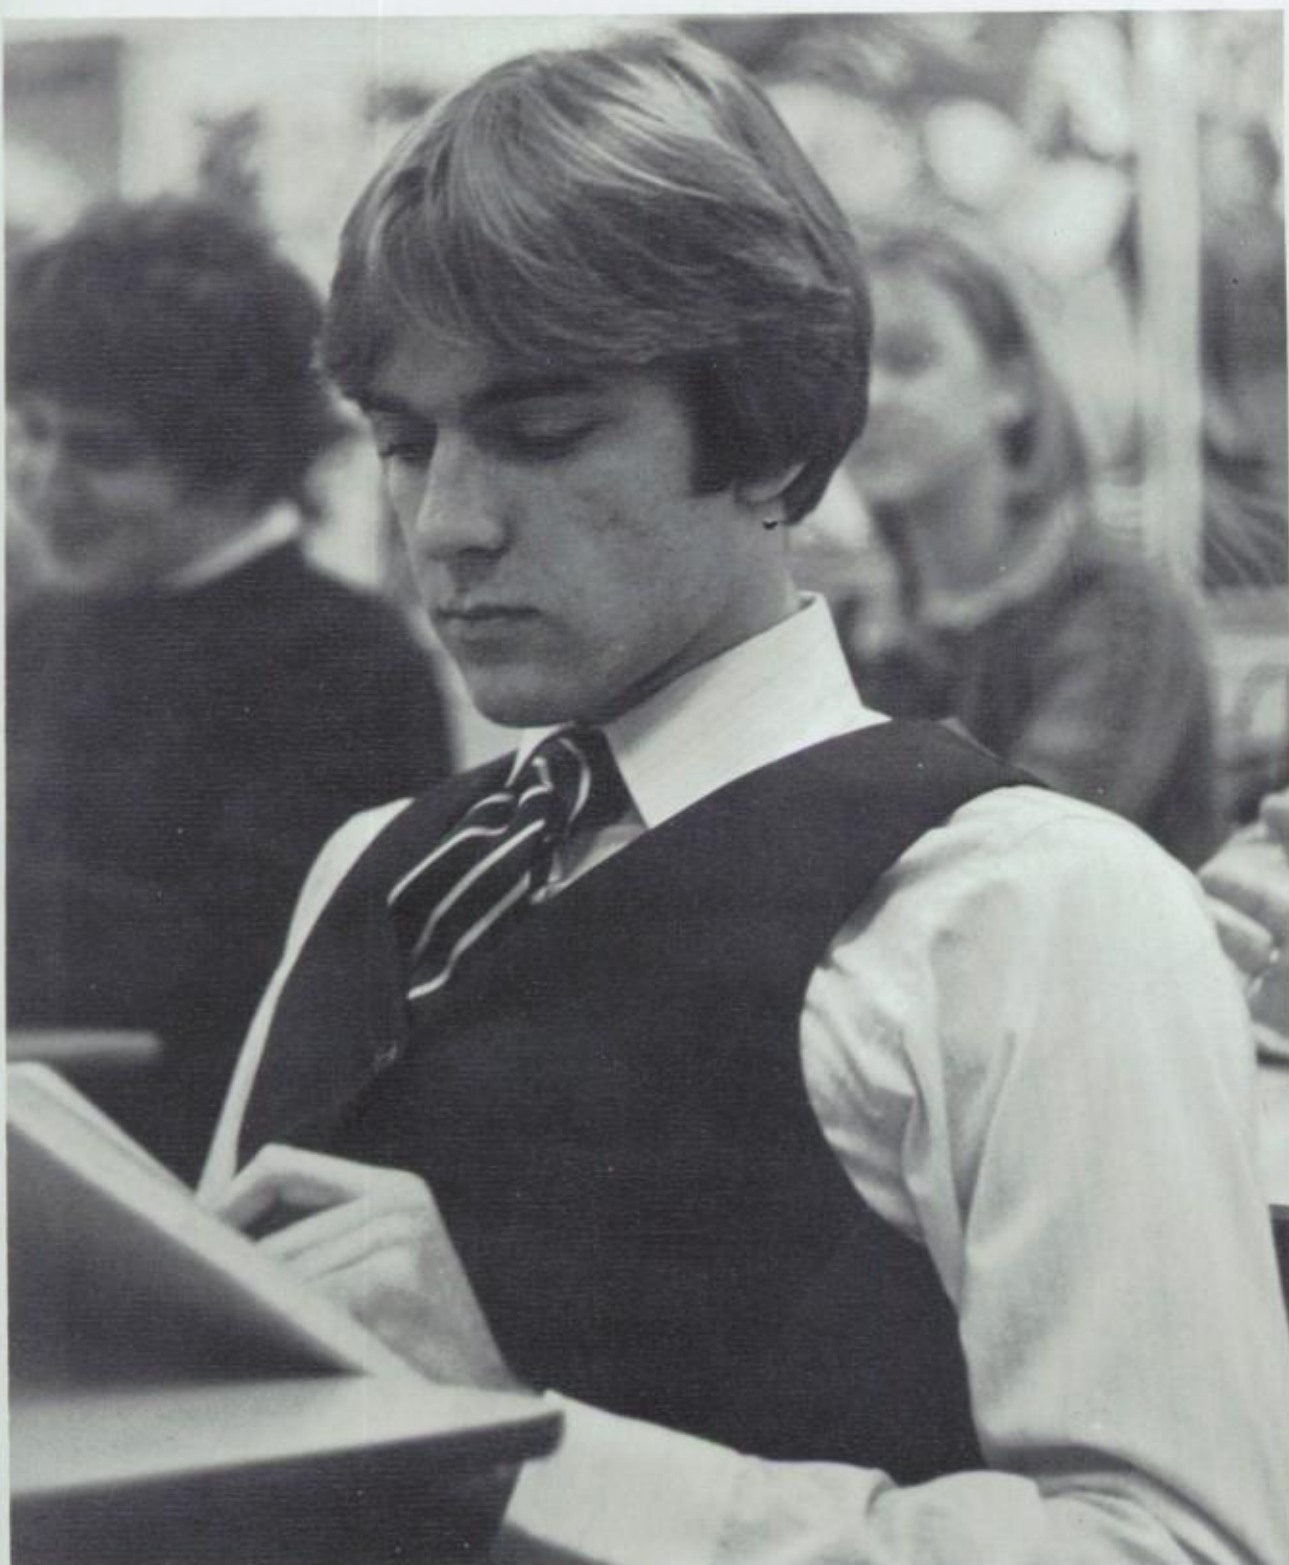

Paul Fine has been a quiz bowl member for the last four years, during which time the team has finished first place in the league on two occasions.

Honors Western World Literature is only one of Andy Muchow's eight courses which he is taking during his senior year.

During the half time of a home basketball game, Martin McHugh takes pictures for the Wyandotte.

Second year letterman Bob Jacobs goes up for two and gets fouled in the process.

Correcting copy for the Wyandotte is copy editor Abby Edinger.

Listening attentively to a Hamlet lecture in Honors Western World Literature is senior Betsy Thal.

Juniors

Almost there

By the time junior year rolled around, the class had already acquired some responsibilities. Now it was time to add some privileges, among them: legally attending R-rated movies, following vocational pursuits, playing varsity athletics and participating in the powderpuff game.

Having that 17th birthday allowed many juniors to see movies such as: The Blues Brothers, Ordinary People, The Blue Lagoon and Caddy Shack, while their younger friends either had to avoid a truthful answer about their age or stay at home.

At some Toledo area theaters these under-aged movie-goers who wished to see movies with more mature topics caused theaters to enforce the 17-year-old admittance rule more strictly, according to Mr. Rollie Shinar, assistant manager at the Franklin Park Cinemas.

The third year of high school is also the year that some students begin vocational instruction. Mr. Mike Anello, vocational counselor, has noted that more juniors are becoming aware of the advantages of the two year programs available to them.

As a sophomore, they must ask the challenging question about their future. "They find that they like the financial independence that earning their own money gives them through the career training they receive," according to Mr. Anello.

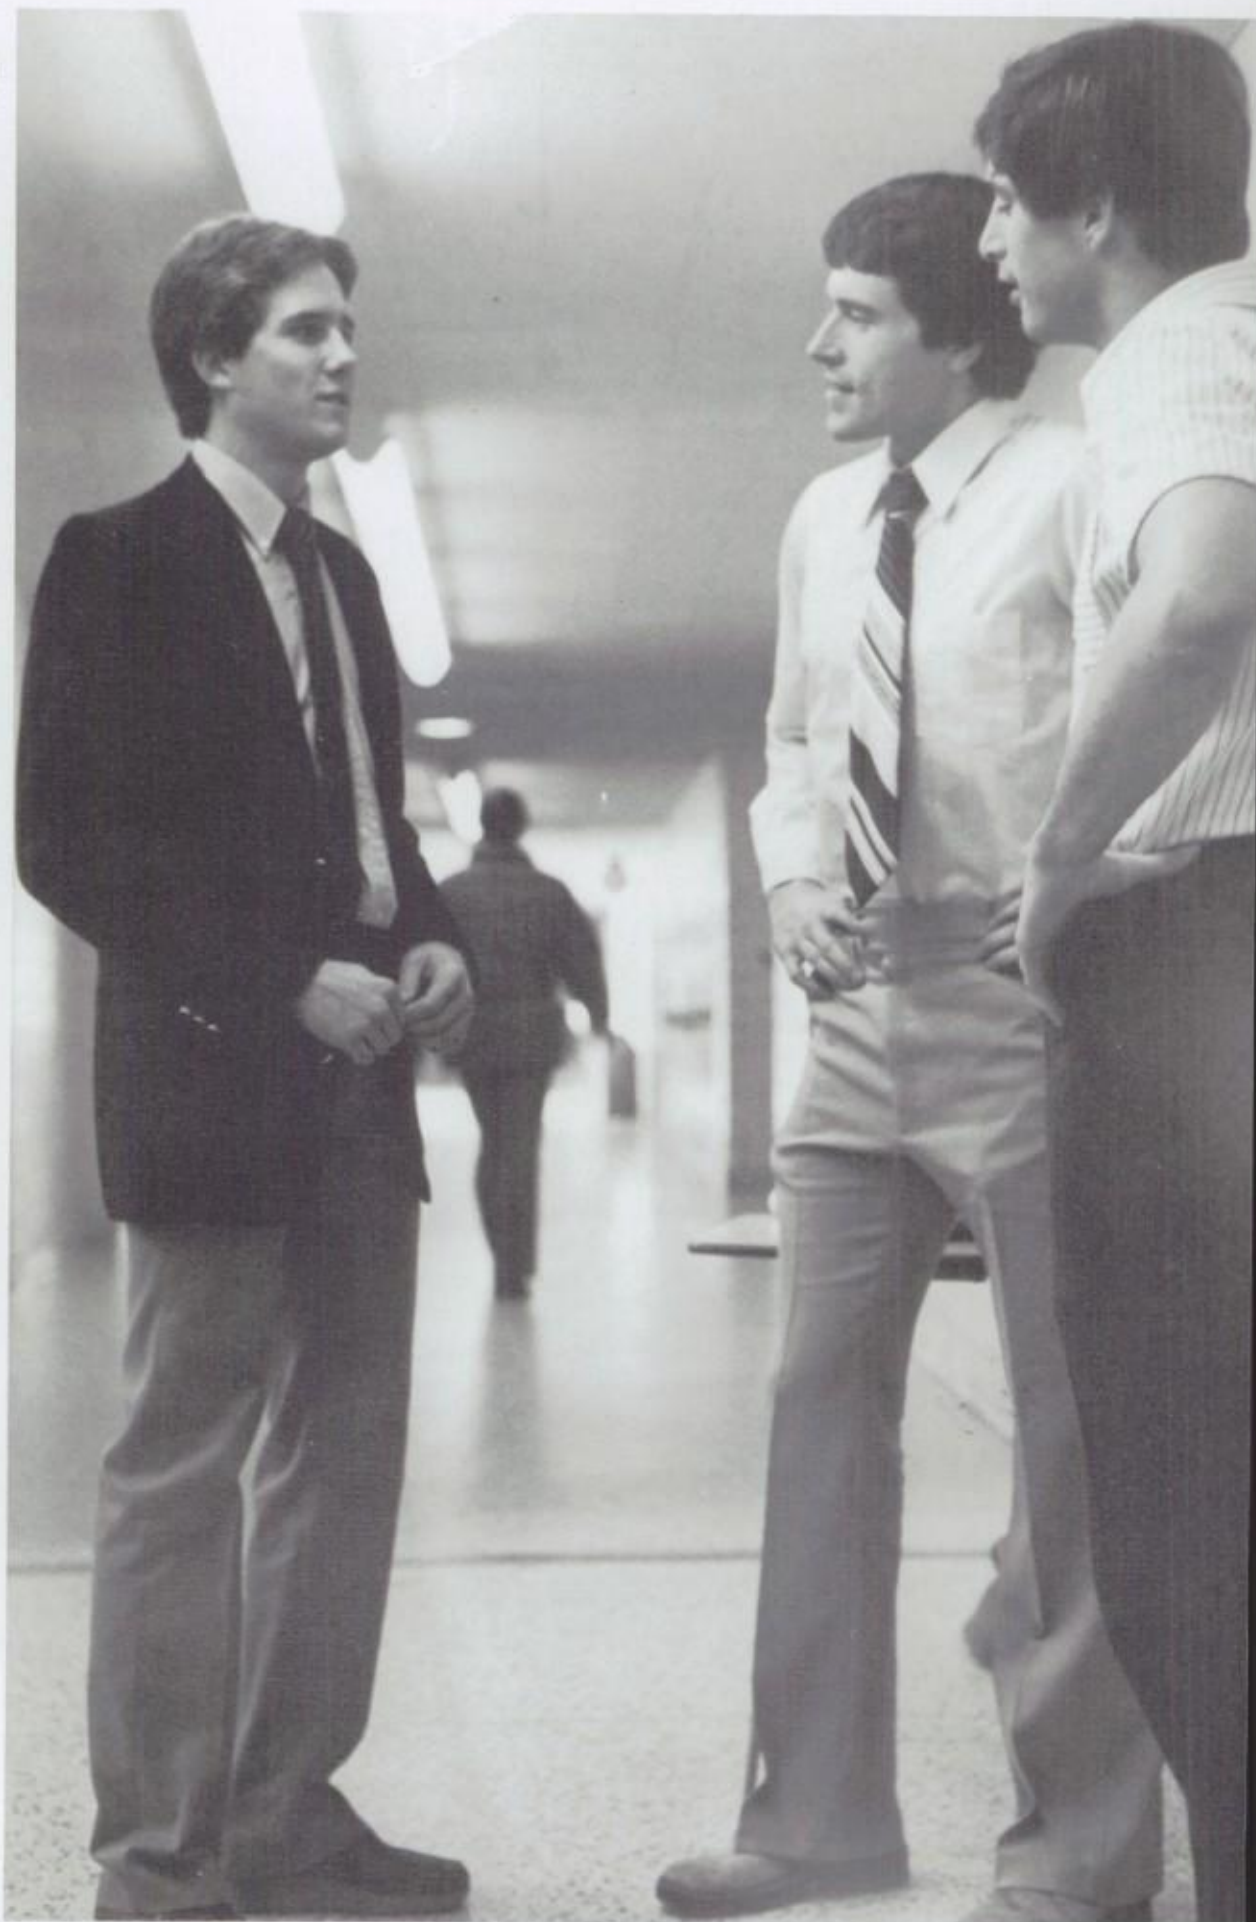

Another opportunity open to juniors is playing varsity sports. After competing for two years at the freshmen or junior varsity level, moving up to the varsity is a rewarding experience.

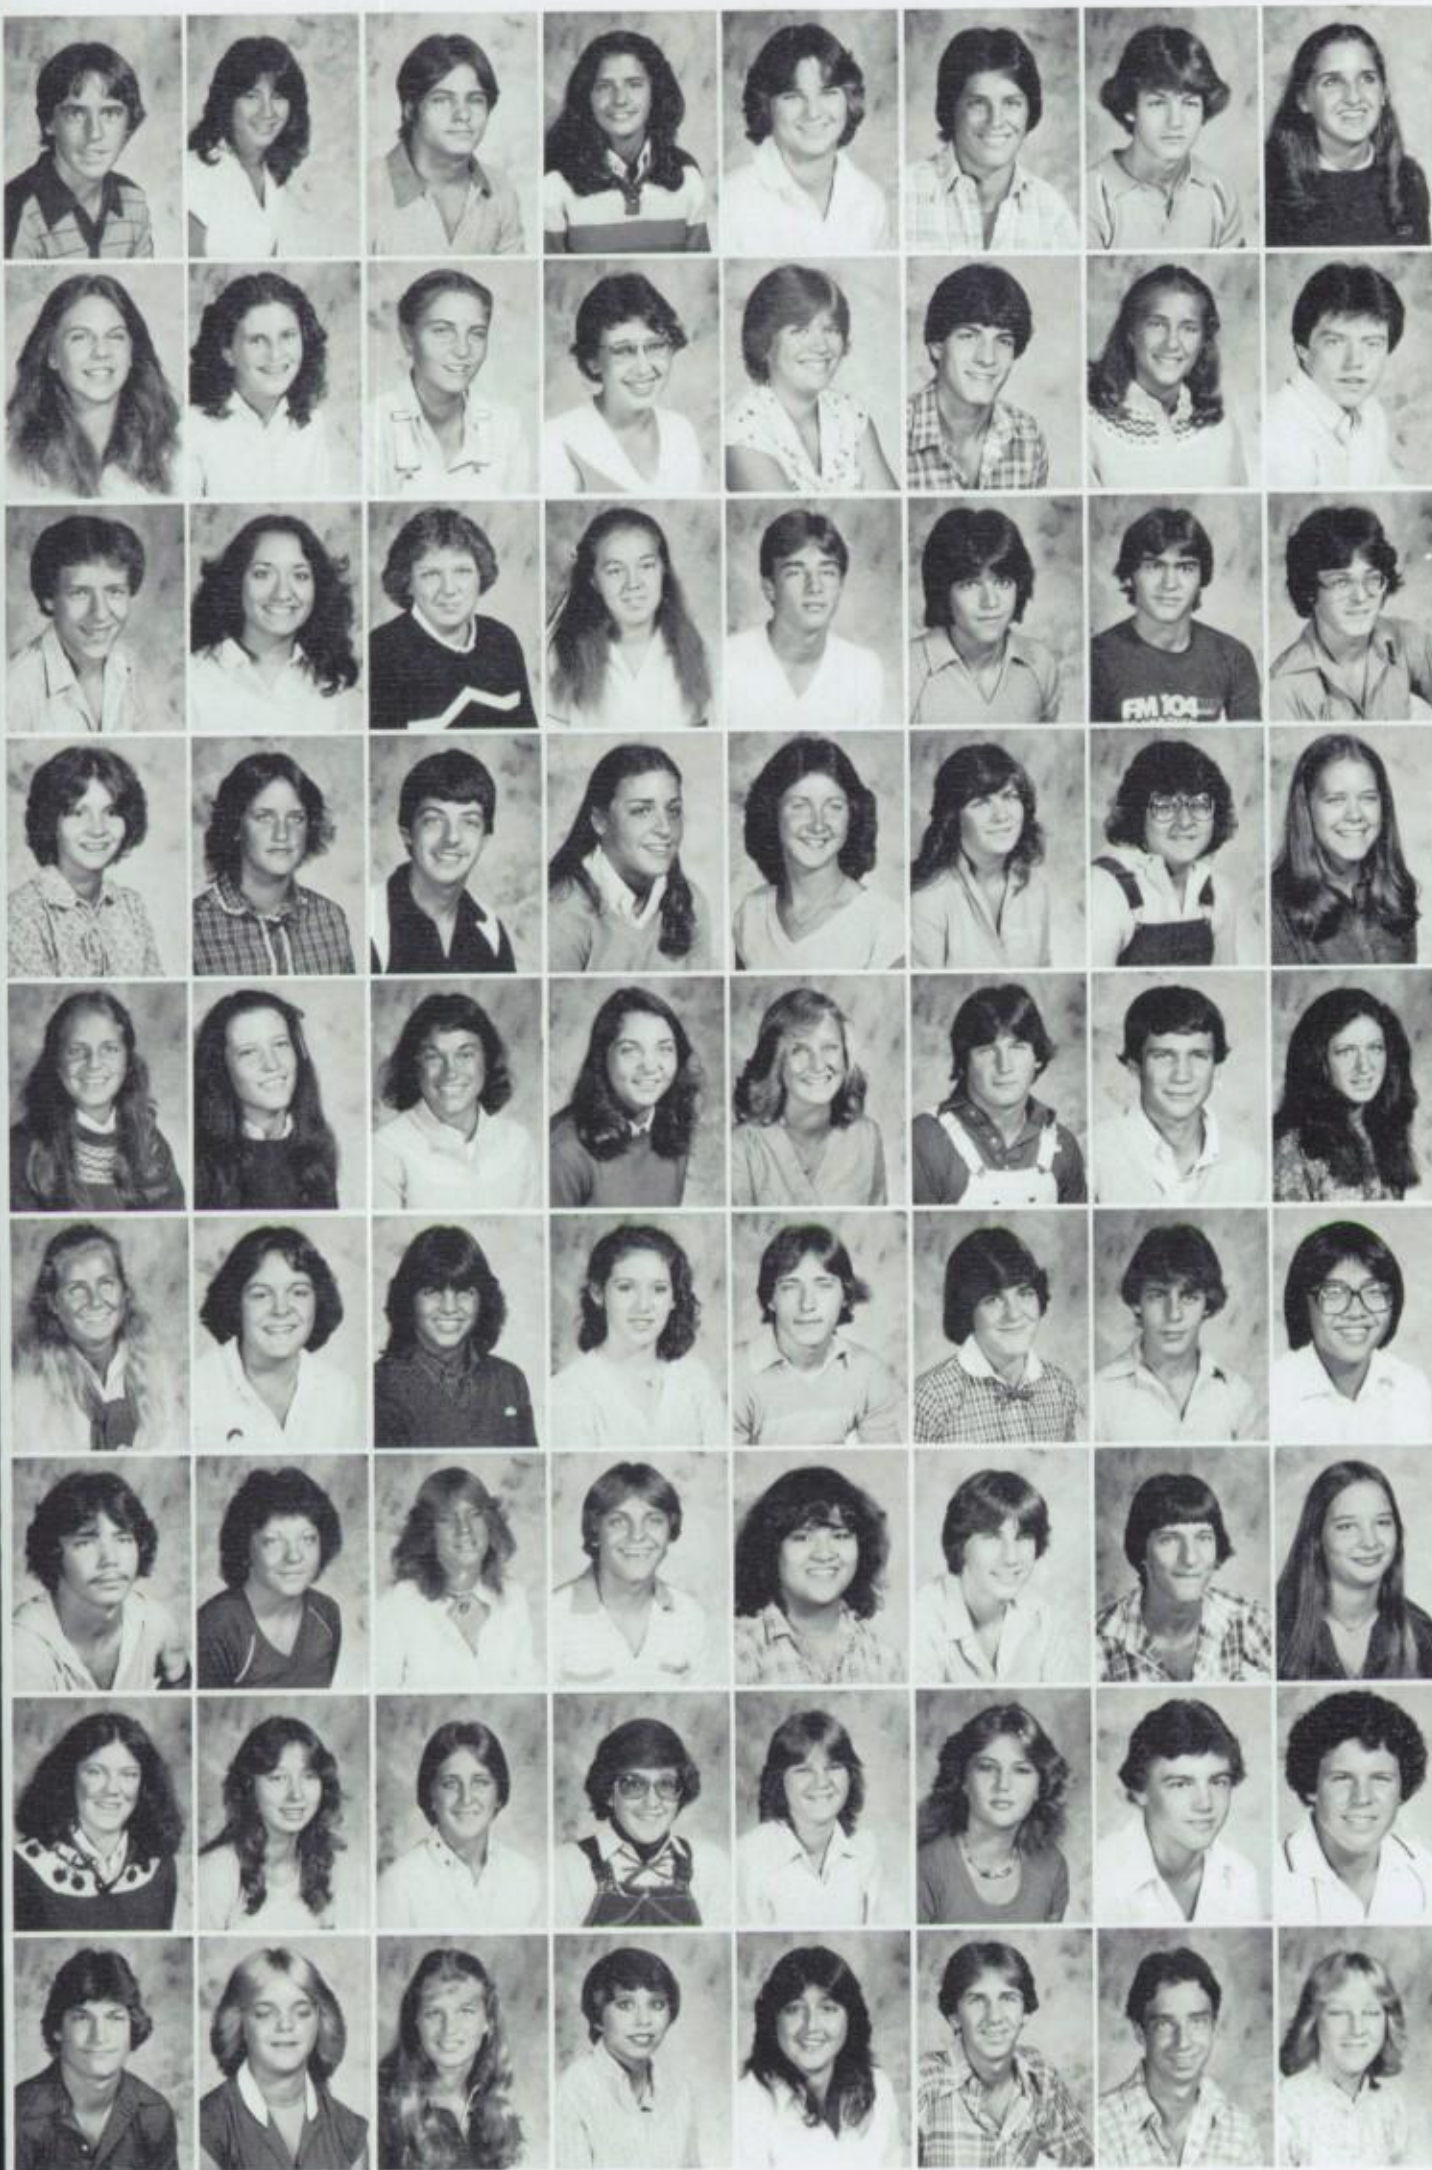

"Playing in front of the crowds is one of the better aspects of playing for a varsity team," said junior Tom Snowberger, a basketball player. He also stated that even though many juniors didn't start, valuable experience was gained.

Varsity sports are not the only new challenge to juniors, the girls also got their chance to play in the annual powderpuff football game. Although the weeks of practice didn't result in a victory, junior girls put a scare in the seniors, scoring the first two touchdowns before finally losing 37-18.

The next day at school, junior Tom Snowberger consults with Coach Jeff Seemann and Coach Mike O'Riley about the previous night's basketball game.

Upon turning 17, juniors can legally watch just about any movie on the theater marquee.

Rocky Muszynski barefoot water-skier

Rocky Muszynski likes the challenge of skiing — without skis.

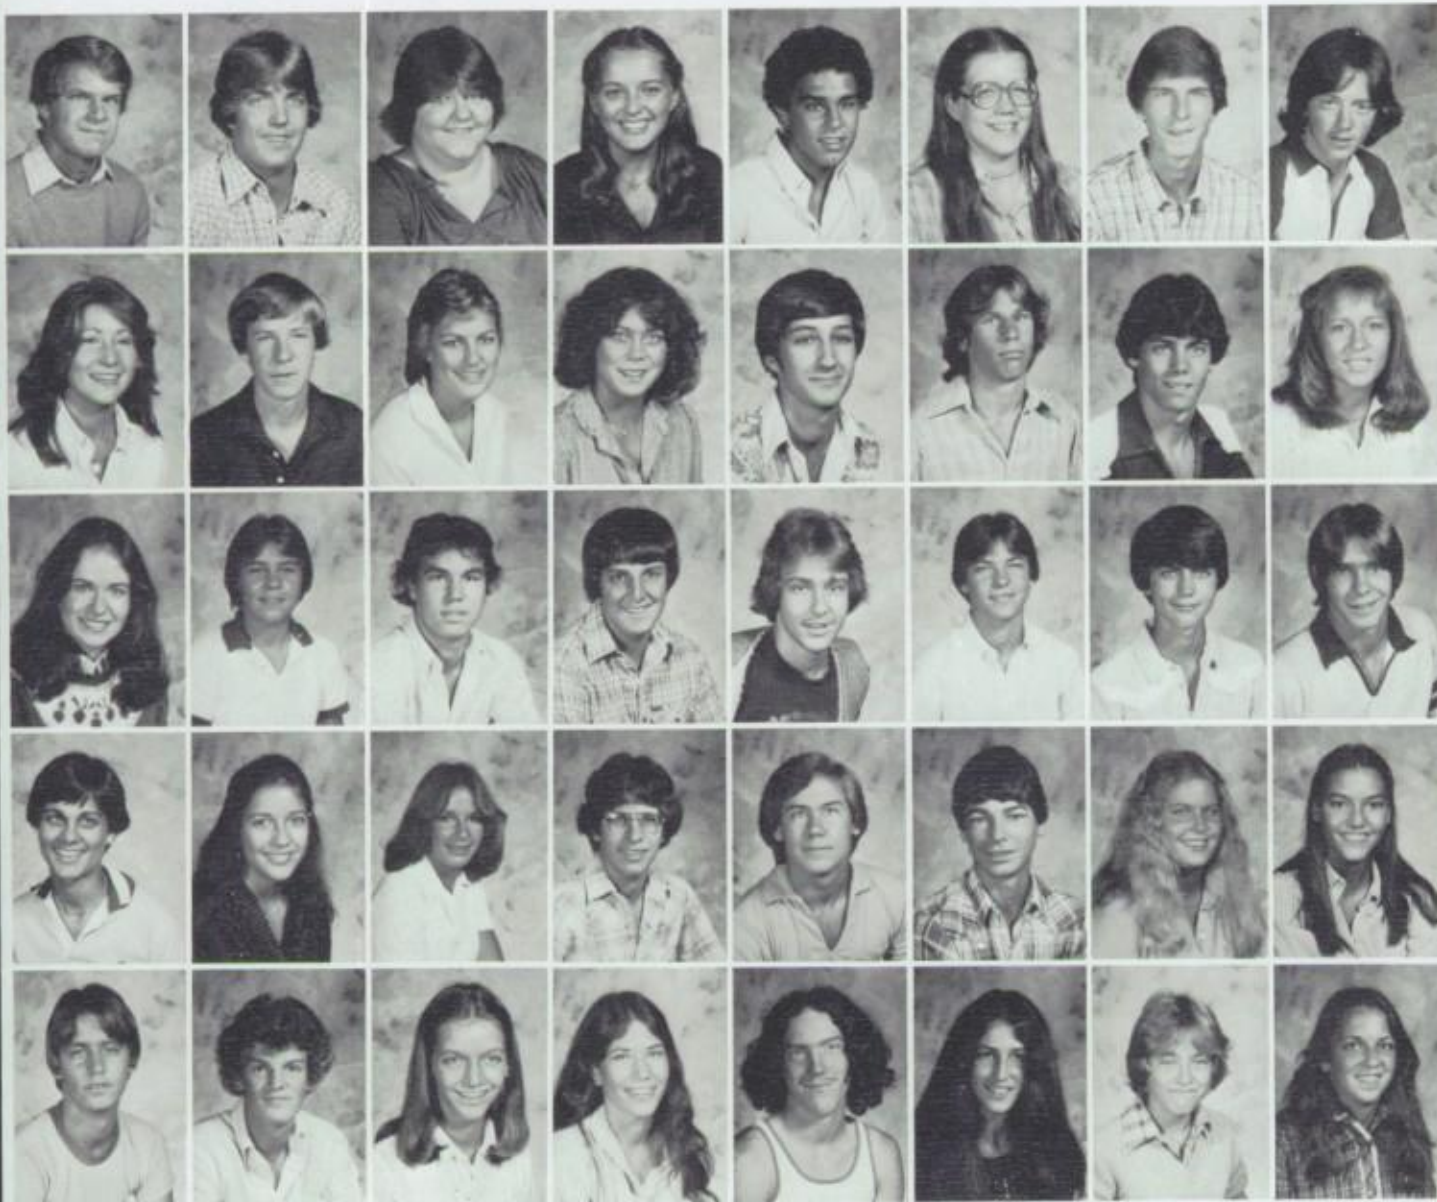

At the age of eight Rocky began skiing. Three years later he took his first barefoot ski run. It took many long afternoons of practice before this stunt could be achieved successfully.

Besides barefooting, he also enjoys slalom and trick skiing. In fact, he is a competitive slalom skier, and a good one at that. Last summer he received first place rankings in all of the Maumee River contests which he entered.

During the summer the Muszynski family spends a lot of time at their cottage on Devil's Lake. Rocky in particular spends most of his summers there, getting practice for his skiing events. He hopes to continue on with his skiing, as well as his competition.

Rocky Muszynski takes time out in the summer to practice his barefoot water skiing.

Our very own star

Stage, setting, spotlight! Junior Amy Campbell has been there many times. Amy has participated in such plays as The Sound of Music, Hay Fever, and Ah, Wilderness! at various area theaters.

As Amy's parents met while doing a play, Amy comes from an acting family. According to Amy, her parents encouraged her to act but never pushed her. As Amy put it, "My mother is not a stage mother at all."

Amy did her first community theater when she had just turned 15. Since then, she has done three community plays and one professional play, The Sound of Music. This play broke the record for the longest run at the Westgate Dinner Theater. In that play, Amy had a double role, playing both a nun and a guest at a party.

The first play that Amy ever did, however, was when she was just in third grade. It was a play her mother was directing for a church. the play was entitled Our Town. Although Amy had no speaking part, it was this play that really got her interested in acting. "It was neat and kind of fun to be there to see how my mother could transform these high school kids into their characters."

Her favorite play was Hay Fever, done in early September at the Toledo Repetoire Theater. "It was so much fun because, for me, it was a really big step, playing somebody 19 or 20. I also got to work with wonderful actors and actresses." Amy's mother was in the play, too, making the practices from 7:30 to 10:30 every night more bearable, according to the red-haired actress.

Although 16-year-old Amy has spent a lot of time acting recently, she doubts that it will become a career. She explained, "Four years and a lot of money is too much to invest in something so risky."

Performing in the play Hay Fever at the Repetoire Theater are junior Amy Campbell and her mother.

Life in the fast lane

Sophomore year has meant many things to those who have just completed it. Class rings and the first homecoming float made it very special to many. However, the one thing that perhaps highlighted the year was acquiring that long anticipated driver's license.

In the past, students were able to receive necessary driving experience through a school-sponsored program taken during class time. However, with the end of the 1978-79 school year came an end of drivers' education at Northview because of the high cost of maintaining cars, insurance, etc. The one remaining alternative for students was commercial driving schools.

In the Toledo area many driver's training schools can be found. Two, however, stand out as the most popular with Northview students: ABC Driving School and Town and Country Driving School.

Two different programs are offered at Town and Country, while only one is offered at ABC. Depending upon the program taken, the prices range from $20 for a three-month program at Town and Country, to about $150 for a 16-hour class which is offered at both schools.

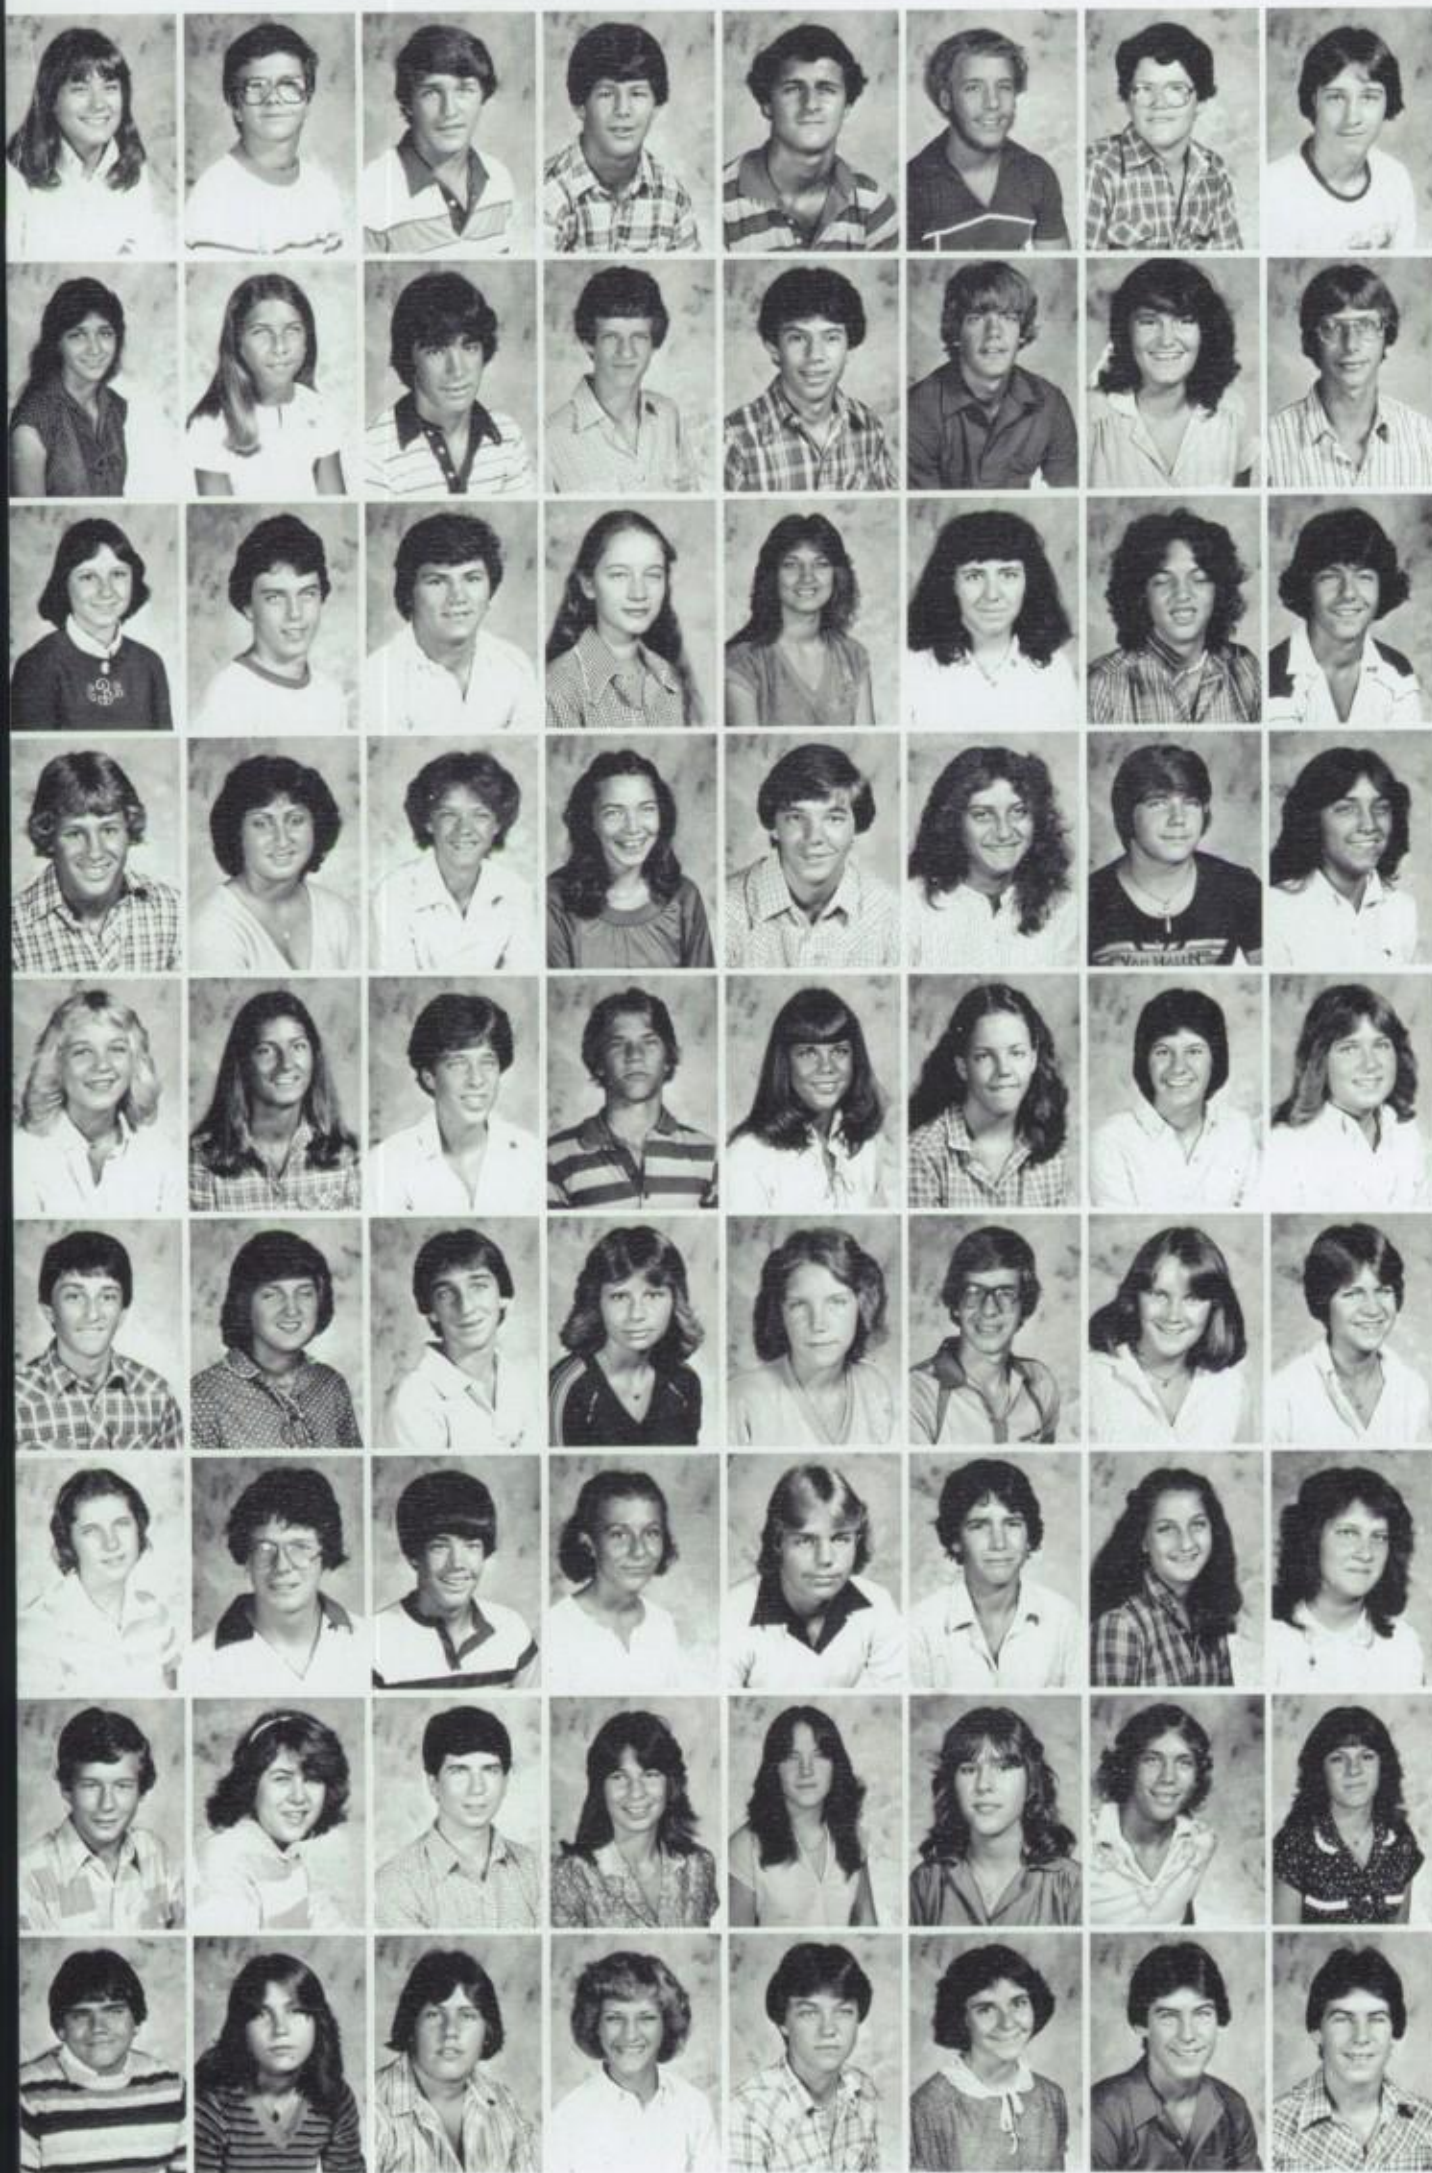

This second type of program, just like everything else nowadays, does not come cheap. The school board lends a helping hand, though, nearly one-third of the cost of the program is paid by the Sylvania City Schools.

All the time and effort put into obtaining a driver's license is well worth it for most students. High school is a time when teenagers learn responsibilities and independence in addition to the classroom work. Gaining a driver's license during the sophomore year symbolized an initial part of that growing experience.

Dan Couturier studies for his driver's examination after a class lesson at Town and Country Driving School.

Practicing her driving with the instructor from ABC Driving School is sophomore Sue Schelinker.

Bumming rides

Where are you guys going after the game?
McDonald's. Why?

Do you think we could have a ride?

This conversation can be heard practically any Friday or Saturday night in Sylvania.

Almost everybody bums a ride at one time or another while in high school, especially sophomores who haven't gotten their driver's licenses yet. It is perhaps most typical of this group because they want to be able to take part in the weekend activities provided by high school without being chauffeured by parents.

"It works out pretty well when you have upper-classmen friends that can drive," says sophomore Kris Richards.

At the age of 15, finding a ride may be difficult. This time, junior Dorthy Sadd came to the rescue.

More than a teacher

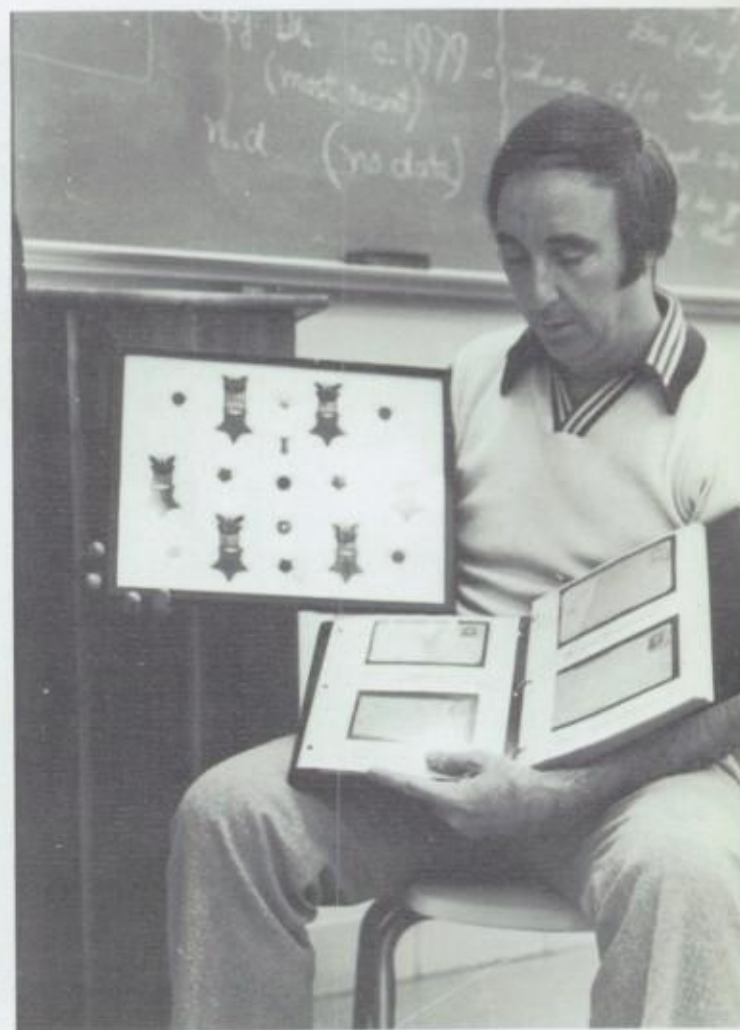

Each spring, freshman students must schedule for their next year's classes. Many teachers are listed for the required English 10 course in the scheduling booklet. Some more times than others. Some with names more familiar than others, but the name which is perhaps the most recognizable to the greatest number of students is that of Mr. Ron Wallace.

This recognition may result from a number of factors. One of the main reasons is likely to be the length of his teaching career at Northview, and before that Sylvania High School. Mr. Wallace has been a teacher for 16 years, and a student teacher for one year at this same building. For the last four years, he has been the English department chairman.

During the 16 years he has been here Mr. Wallace has always instructed 10th grade English classes; however, that is not all. He's also taught Journalism I, Journalism II, senior comp., Advanced English 10 and Honors English 10.

Mr. Wallace does not only have an academic interest in Northview, he also has been an important part of many of the athletic programs. During the '67-'68 school year he was athletic trainer and equipment manager. In 1970, boy's basketball accepted him as a new member of its coaching staff and he continued with basketball for 7 years. 1978 marked Mr. Wallace's entrance into football. In addition, this winter he took the job of coaching the girls' junior varsity basketball team.

Hobbies play an important role in Mr. Wallace's life. He has spent many weekends on rivers and lakes equipped with his fishing pole and tackle box. In the past 10 years, collecting Civil War-related materials has been one of his favorite pastimes, and during the past 15 years he has collected antiques. Another hobby, collecting baseball cards, has been with him since he was a boy growing up in Toledo.

More than once during the year, Mr. Ron Wallace's classes take a break from the normal routine when the English teacher brings in one of his collections to show.

Freshmen—

Frosh face 1st day frenzy

Being a freshman can be difficult — entering a new school, meeting new people, perhaps even altering one's academic and social life. However, once the freshmen get accustomed to the other students and their new surroundings, school becomes more enjoyable. The first step of becoming accustomed to school occurs that first day.

The night before the big day, Sept. 2, may have been filled with apprehension for most freshmen. Maybe this was due to the ending of summer, or perhaps it was due to the beginning of another school year. This first day of school, however, was not a typical one for 298 students. For them, it was the start of their four-year high school career.

Upon arrival at Northview, the first things that greeted the freshmen were the unfamiliar hallways. Along this maze of hallways were lockers and classrooms. Initially, B hall was confused with D hall and A hall with E hall. And, which way to turn to find the steps to G hall from C hall seemed just too much to cope with. However, maps of the school came to the rescue, with those little pieces of paper becoming the newcomer's very best friend.

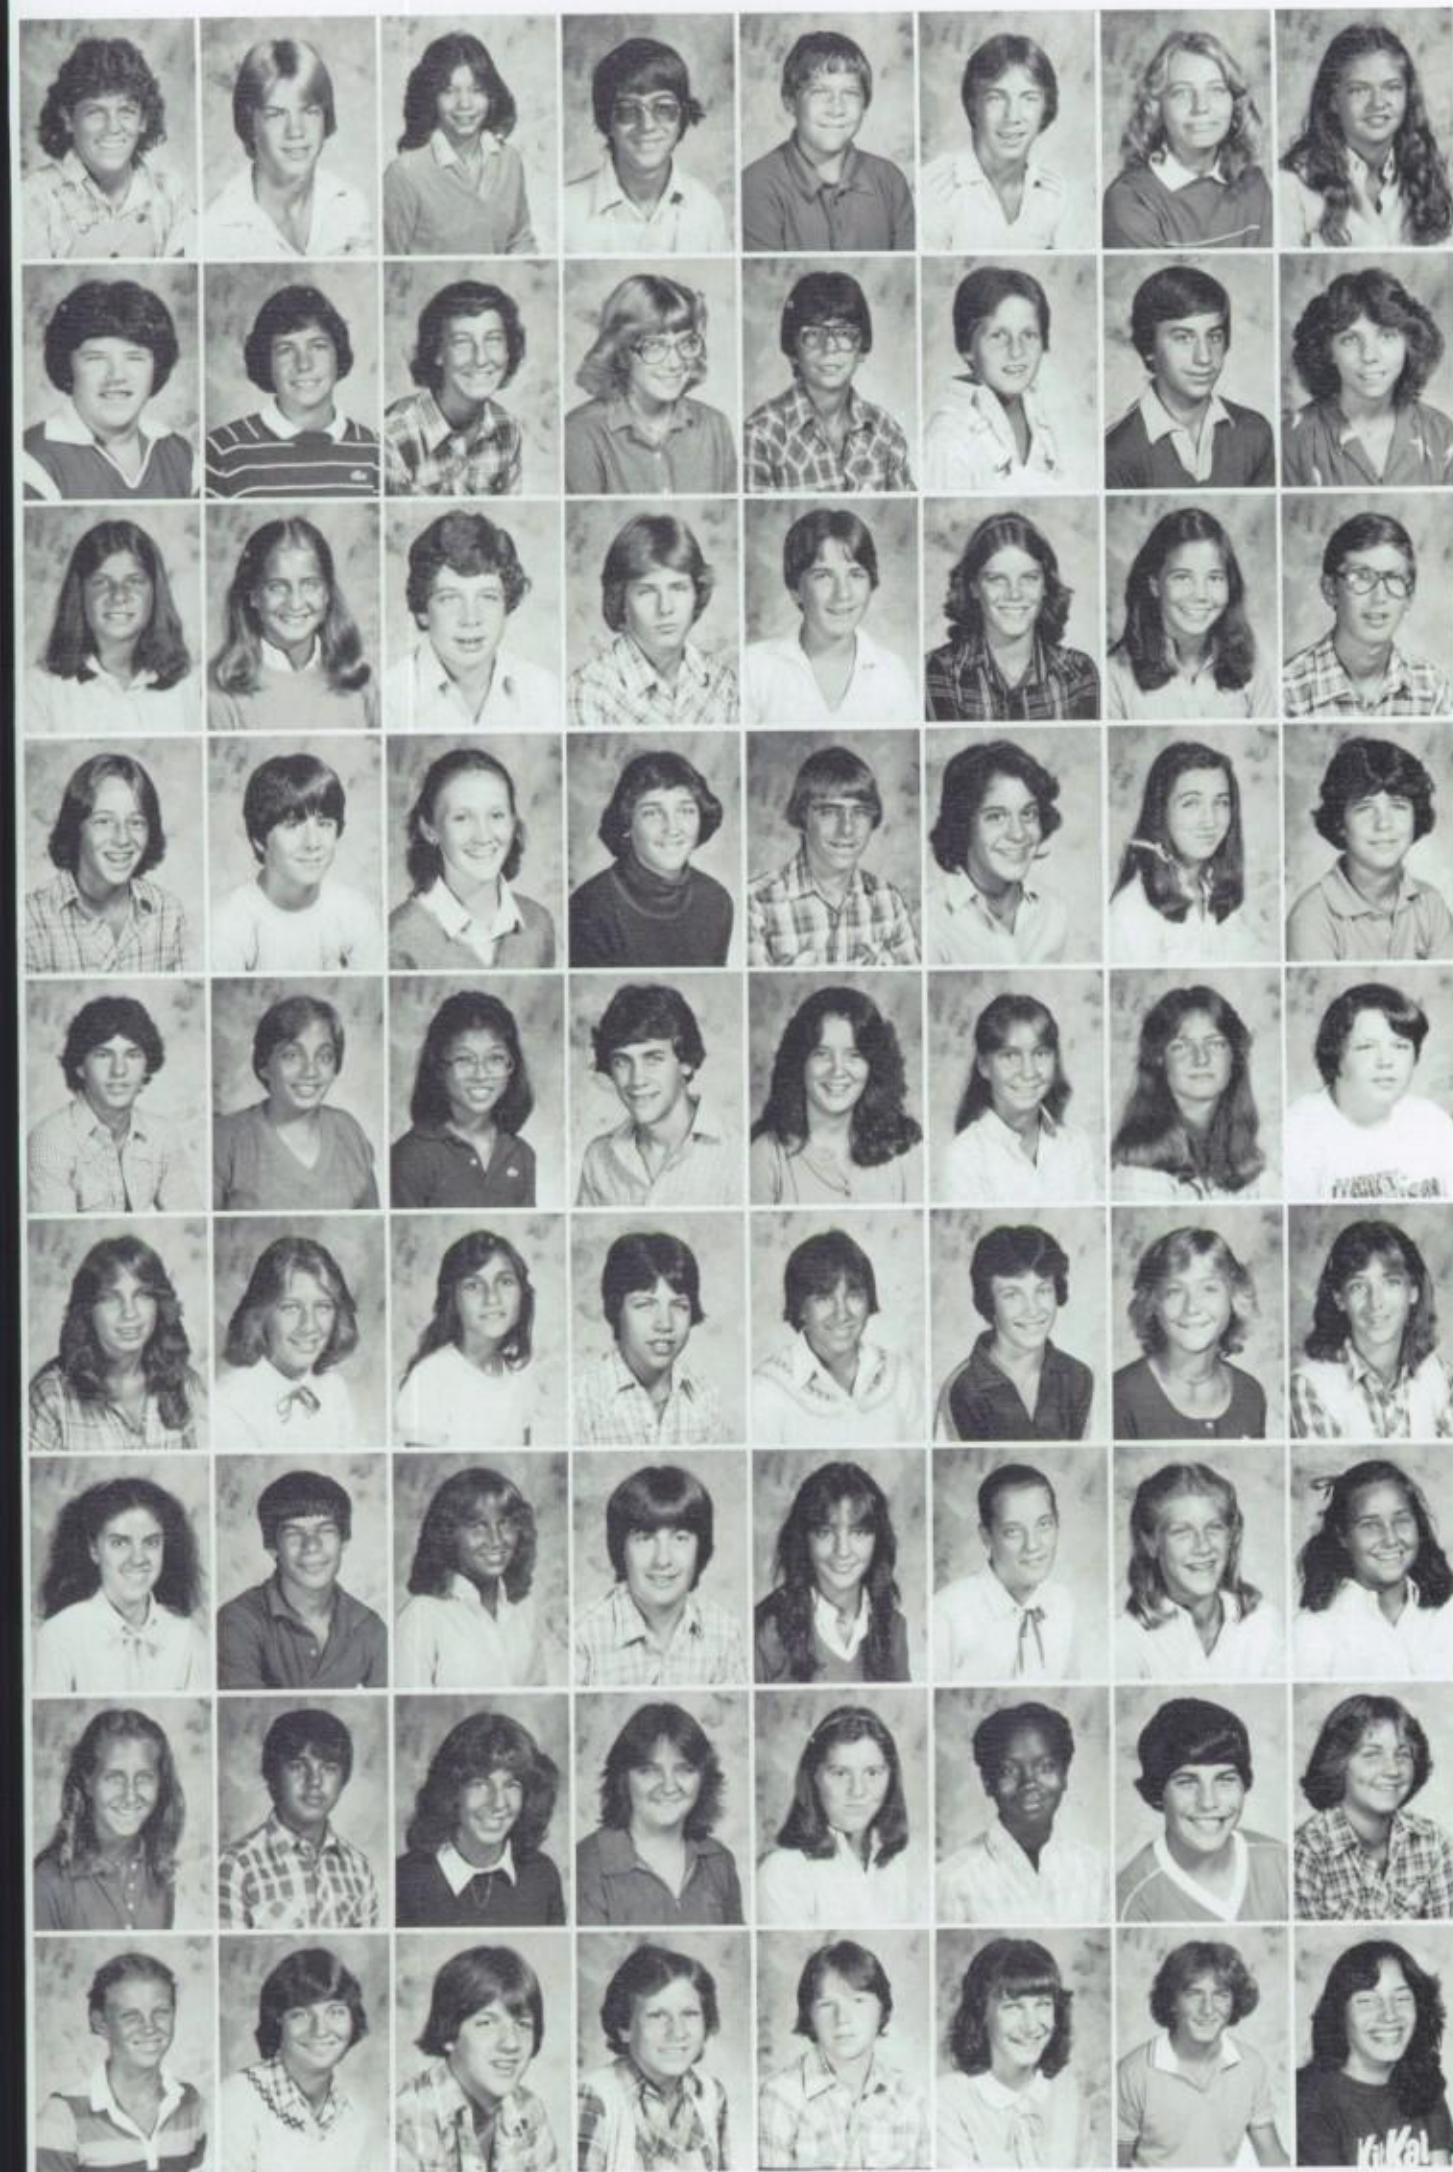

Most of the morning was spent in homerooms where the freshmen became familiarized with the workings of the school. Although a noticeable gap existed between the alumni of Arbor Hills and McCord, it started to fade once the ninth graders left homeroom to attend their classes. Different people started looking less like strangers.

The task of filling out attendance cards was a necessary thing to do in every class. After completing those colorful pieces of cardboard seven times, most freshmen were capable of reciting their student numbers with no trouble at all.

Finally, the bell sounded at 2:25, and everyone raced for their previously located locker. After trying the combination any number of times, the door finally swung open. Books were thrown in, and there was a mad stampede for the buses. The first day of school was over. Now the only thing the freshmen had to worry about was meeting up with the sophomores, juniors and seniors on Sept. 3.

The first week of school a pep assembly was held to honor the football teams. During the assembly, the freshmen were introduced and insisted on going to the front of the line instead of simply stepping forward.

Greek to me!

Greek gods, goddesses and heroes at Northview? For a short period of time, Mrs. Barbara Urbain's freshman Honors English students portrayed them in preparation for The Odyssey.

This was the first year that Mrs. Urbain's class has put on such a detailed production. Groups of four to six students spent about three weeks writing and preparing for their presentations. Their original skits were based on Greek myths which they had studied and presented to the class using elaborate costumes and props.

"They were very impressive," said senior Bob Jacobs, who attended the freshman skits. "I think it's a great way to help kids learn easier."

Late night money

Welcome to the wonderful world of babysitting! With the screaming children and late nights, how do freshmen babysitters hold up? Why do they do this to themselves? The answer is simple — money!

Some sympathetic parents will pay up to $2 an hour; however, on an average Friday or Saturday night with two to four children a sitter will receive between $1 and $1.50 an hour. One question that might be asked is why would anyone babysit, and for such low pay?

There are many reasons for working under these conditions. Some say they like children, but for others, it is the only real job they can get. Most freshmen are usually only 14 or 15 years old, and, by law, can't get a job which pays them more per hour. This leaves them with the option of babysitting for low wages, or not having the extra spending money that every high school student seems to need.

Despite all of the drawbacks of babysitting it does have advantages. As freshmen Kim Claxton explains, "I babysit for all the munchies!" Another advantage of babysitting, unlike many jobs that upper-classmen hold, is that there is no income tax to report.

So, until freshmen celebrate their 16th birthdays and are eligible to hold other jobs, babysitting is one of the most popular and common ways to earn money.

One of freshman Cathy Neely's duties as a babysitter is to keep the children amused.

The cost of learning

Two years ago, a $5 allowance from mom could last through Saturday night with a little planning and a little luck. After spending 75 cents a day for lunch, and sometimes 25 cents for a candy bar in seventh period commons, you still had a little left over to buy a football ticket for Friday night.

But those days are long gone. Inflation, running nearly at 12 percent, has taken the buying power out of that allowance. Your parents may have taken that fact into account, although economic trends rarely seem to be consulted when allowances are computed.

So, this year that same $5 must buy a $1.15 lunch, a 30 cent candy bar, and pay higher entertainment prices. Movies were almost $4 and some parties ran as high as $3. This all led to a need for more money. These extra bucks came from various sources, although some students just did without.

An increase in the minimum wage to $3.10 helped ease problems for those who worked. While finding ways to avoid high prices became a necessary pastime for those jobless ones. By "brown-bagging" it at lunch, a dollar or more could be saved everyday. This extra money was often put toward weekends to help pay steadily rising gas prices.

Not only did students have to pay more to survive during the year, but also to remember it, even the price of the yearbook increased from $10 to $12.

DECA members Chad Litten, Stuart Longmuir, Laura Hieber, Scott Arkebauer and Richard Hackett tabulate information for a marketing research survey.

Junior Kim Hanna and the other majorettes made their halftime debut with rifles last fall. The guns had been purchased by the boosters several years ago but were not used until last fall.

At the Northview Wildcat Invitational awards ceremony, forensic director Mark Ferguson expresses his gratitude for the work of the speech boosters. They were responsible for funding the tournament and preparing hot meals for the contestants.

Wildcat fans cheer on the football team with the pom-poms provided by the athletic boosters.

The speech boosters provided dinner for the competitors at the Northview Tournament. Mr. Rolf Hess volunteers his service behind the register.

Boosters — they keep us out of the red

Boosters do much more than raise community spirit for band, sports and speech. They raise money — lots of it — to keep those activities competitive and sound.

As a former athlete, Dr. James Lange, president of the athletic boosters, feels that the opportunity to work with the athletic program is very rewarding.

There is more to these groups than just monthly meetings. To begin with, there is the band and orchestra boosters. With Mr. Gordon Stace as president, and the rest of the workers, things get done. He and his crew met four times this year and planned the annual budget and expenditures. They even sponsored a pizza party for the band after the last football game.

The role of the boosters includes contributions (approximately $300) to the school's music department and buying new uniforms and jackets for the band and orchestra every seven years.

In order to pay for these items, the boosters undertake many money making projects. In February, for example, the boosters organized a citrus fruit sale with the band and orchestra members taking orders.

The band and orchestra boosters made one-third of their budget when band and orchestra members participated in the annual tag day along with many members of the sport programs.

According to Dr. Lange, the athletic boosters annually spend $10,000-$12,000 on sports.

Only this past year the boosters purchased new warm-up outfits for the boys' basketball team costing $600, while the girls' volleyball team received uniforms totalling $425 and the hockey team received new gloves and helmets estimated at $1,125. A large portion of booster money comes in the form of $10 memberships to the Wildcat Club.

"All athletic teams benefit from the booster club's support and financial assistance," said boys' basketball coach Jeff Seemann. In addition to booster money, the sports programs receive money from the athletic department. This money is acquired from admission fees which accounts for 85 percent of the athletic budget.

Another group that is essential to an extracurricular activity is the speech booster organization. Like the other booster clubs, this group consists of parents whose sons or daughters compete on the speech team. They meet once a month in the commons.

"This booster club is totally necessary due to the lack of financial support by the board of education," claimed Mr. Don Johnson, president.

The boosters primary responsibility is to raise enough money to send students on speech tournaments throughout Ohio and other states where they have consistently placed high. These tournaments require an entrance fee which is paid for through bake sales, raffles and other fund raising activities.

"The boosters are a primary source of financial and moral support," Mr. Mark Ferguson, speech coach, said. "Without them we would not be able to enjoy our national caliber status."

Though each of these groups supports a different extracurricular activity, booster organizations have a common goal of keeping these clubs going.

The athletic boosters raise some of their funds by selling refreshments at basketball games.

It's never too late

For some people, school does not end after they're 18. In fact, many classes begin for adults after the teen-aged students have gone home.

In Sylvania, the community education department of the Sylvania Community Services Center offers a variety of classes throughout the year. For example, more than 130 classes ranging from office and computer programming courses to photography and home improvement programs were available for both adults and students during the last year.

The Community Education program traces its beginnings to 1977 when taxpayers were looking for ways to utilize the school facilities more fully. A number of Sylvania residents who were no longer sending children to school still wanted to receive benefits from the city and looked at the schools as a logical place to continue their learning. That fall the program first began offering educational and just-for-pleasure courses, bringing the schools closer to people who otherwise wouldn't use them.

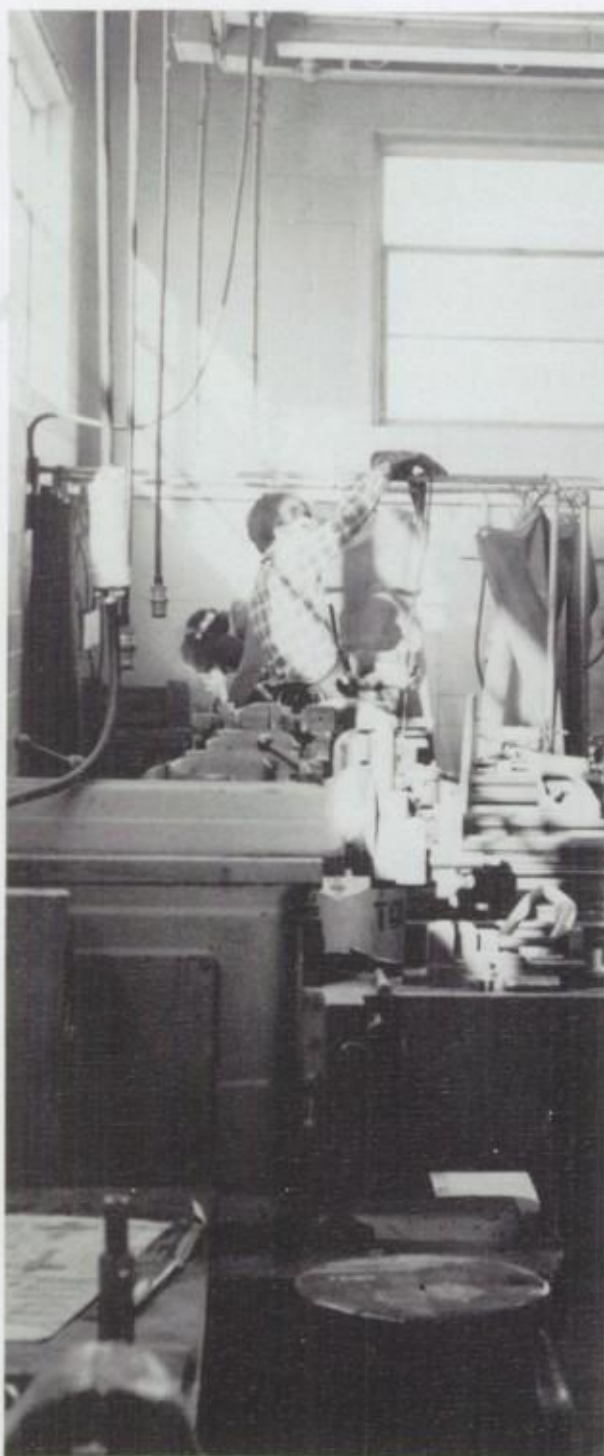

Most of the people who have taken the courses seemed to enjoy them. Mrs. Nancy Paufl, a Sylvania resident, said, "I took some photography classes that were really great, and the teachers were super."

The courses are taught by instructors who are businessmen or women, artists or even teachers in the school system. Classes were available in the latter part of September, January and in mid-April. Depending on the type of class, the number of sessions varied. The different groups met in several locations: the Burnham Building, Northview, Southview and several elementary schools.

Tuition varied depending on the instructor and the course requirements. Prices ranged from $5 for a class on baby-sitting for kids to $45 for a basic driving class offered to adults.

Coordinators of the program were Mr. John Ray, of Sylvania Services and Mrs. Maxine Fuller. According to Mr. Ray, community response to the program has been good and the schools are cooperative in the use of the facilities. He is very optimistic that in future years the schools and community education programs will continue and be successful. As Mr. Ray said, "We want to do things that the community wants."

Welding held at Northview (above left) is one of the many courses available for both adults and students.

Steve Strayer (above right) a Sylvania resident, practices what he has learned in the welding class offered every Friday night in the Northview machine shop.

As children grow older, their parents' participation in school activities seems to increase. For example Mr. Jim Bachman, a Sylvania resident, told Linda Leadbetter and Tammy Bernard that since his children are still in elementary school he has not yet become too involved in high school activities.

Senior patrons

Dear Jan Underhill,

May you continue to make friendships as warm and have experiences as pleasurable as those of your four years just past.

Mom and Dad

Dear Bill Maxwell,

We hope that the good years and happy memories from Northview will carry over into your college life. Congratulations and good luck!

Mom and Dad

Dear Robin Hess,

Our best congratulations to our daughter, who has truly made her high school years productive. May your future ventures be as rewarding.

Mom and Dad

Dear Scott Armstrong,

Remember that what you believe will depend very much upon what you are. Today is the first day of the rest of your life.

All our love,

How over 600 Toledo businesses are cutting the cost of doing business.

It's all in their employment policy.

They're firing scores of big, lazy, unreliable copiers.

And hiring smaller, efficient, trustworthy Savin copiers

Savin

The revolutionary copiers that are winning over big business.

that have won the hearts and souls of big business to such a degree, that you can now find Savin in over 600 Toledo businesses.

And Savin has a big selection for big business. Everything from our revolutionary 840 (the smallest, lightest plain paper copier ever), to our high volume Savin 600 copier/sorter.

So if you haven't been turning over more and more of your copying to Savin, it's time you did.

AMERICA... PASS OR FAIL?

We're facing our greatest test... the Energy Test.

You can help.

- By learning all you can about the problem.
- By looking at the problem with an open mind, logically, without blind emotion.
- By considering making the technology of energy production your life's work.
- By learning to conserve.

BEST OF LUCK TO THE CLASS OF 1981 FROM

PPG INDUSTRIES

2742 HILL AVE.
TOLEDO, OHIO

We did it, even though it sometimes left us ragged. More than once we were dummies and wanted to flush it, or throw it in the gutter. But we kept our eyeline on the point and finally all of our actions were justified.

Several times we worked for 428 minutes straight, it was quite a job. The layout of the publications room made us bleed for a reverse of scenery. But we wouldn't let the book flop, that wasn't our style.

You guys did a terrific job. Good luck to everyone, (especially those sticking around one more year.)

Love to all,

Fire — false or flaming

Remember being in elementary school when the fire alarm went off? Everyone jumped to their feet, then calmly and orderly left the room to wait outside.

With few false alarms being pulled in grammar school, when the bell sounded it meant a fire or a planned fire drill. In high school, however, a fire alarm causes little, if any movement at all. Everyone who hears the bell simply listens for Mr. Becker to announce, "Students and staff please stay in the building," or wait to be excused outside.

So when the fire alarm rang on Jan. 16 it was no surprise when a voice came over the PA telling everyone to remain in the building. But within a few minutes the voice came back on saying there was a real fire and everyone should leave the building.

The cause of this confusion was a small fire in a closet near the E-Hall smoking area. According to firemen, the fire was started by a cigarette butt kicked under the closet door.

Once the Sylvania Township Fire Department responded with six vehicles, it took them approximately 20 minutes to extinguish the fire and clear the halls of smoke.

Some students were angry about missing lunch or waiting outside, and others were glad to miss sixth period due to the smokey halls. Senior Corky Rocco felt that in an indirect way the fire was "good for the school" because it gave students the chance to think what could happen if there were a large fire.

A Style All Our Own

In the seventh row, tenth seat of the Little Theater, sit the parents of a student in the orchestra. Their little darling is sitting in the bassoon section playing his heart out when something awful happens.

The parents are positive that the ill-sounding noise just released from the bassoon section during "Do Not Go Gentle Into That Good Night" was definitely not their child. But who did hit that obnoxious note? Whoever it was, they left an impression on everyone listening.

Although members of the orchestra occasionally play a sour note, it is the overall performance that leaves people with their final impression. Likewise, the 1980-81 school year was one big performance with 1,199 Northview students playing the parts to give the school its own style.

While both memorable events and others that would rather be forgotten combined to form a style for Northview as a whole, groups of people were developing within the school.

A Style All Our Own

Play it again, Sam

There always was and always will be an "in" crowd and "out" crowd, just as the Republicans became the "in" crowd at Washington with the election of Ronald Reagan as president.

Typical high school behavior generally denoted the "in" people as those wearing the latest fashions or doing the newest things. But it takes more than just fashionable clothes to create a style, although that doesn't hurt any, either.

In 183 days, a style was developed for Northview which was just a mixture of the characteristics of the individual students.

Well, now that the concert has ended, nearly everyone who took part seems to be satisfied with the performance. Of course, there are always a few things that could have been done better or differently, but that can be worked on in the next concert which starts in September.

Volume 55 of The Wyandotte was printed by Hunter Publishing Company, Winston-Salem, North Carolina. Mr. Doug Bynum represented the company in the Toledo area.

1,019 copies were printed with black ink on embossed paper. Each 9 x 12 book contains 276 pages with a 32-page supplement delivered in late August. The cover is quarter-bound with Ultramarine Blue, #41049, and Natural Beige sailcloth, #15080. The spine is silk screened with PMS Blue 282-C. The title is hot stamped with gold foil on the front lid. All tool lines were set by The Wyandotte staff in a 2 point.

The approximate cost of the book was $20,700. The books were sold for $12, plus 75 cents for mailing the supplement.

Individual page specifications are as follows: pages 1, 9, 49, 85, 133, 167, 209 PMS 281-C with the copy reverse printed. Pages 2, 3, 6, 7, 10, 11, 15, 50, 51, 54, 55, 58, 59, 62, 63 PMS 109 yellow; all sports scoreboards and the senior directory are a 30 percent gray screen. Lineshots on the dividers are 30 percent PMS 281 screens.

The style remains the same

For the last 275 pages we've been highlighting some of the people, places and things which give us a style uniquely Northview. But in our attempts to record as many memories as possible, we nearly neglected to mention the one design which has signified the school for almost 21 years — the varsity "S."

People not familiar with the school's history sometimes asked whether the "S" stood for Sylvania or Southview. It was an understandable question because very few people referred to the school by its official name — Sylvania Northview.

Since the opening of Sylvania High School in 1960, the varsity letter has remained the same through three changes: from Sylvania High, to Sylvania South and finally the split into Sylvania Northview and Southview.

According to Athletic Director James Glase, part of the reason the "S" has not been changed was to retain "Sylvania" in the name of the school. Continuing the tradition of the varsity "S" keeps a part of the school's style the same over the years. So for now, the style remains the same.

JV cheerleader Lori Miller and the rest of the JV squad joined the varsity cheerleaders to cheer the Wildcats on to victory at the Northview-Southview football game.
